BID SENIORS LONG FAREWELL

Christian Associations Give Blow-Out to Arts Graduates

DeLong Starred—"Buzz Saw" Records Make Hit—Various and Diverse Games Played—Evening Long to Be Remembered.

On last Friday evening the Christian Associations tendered to the Seniors what in a chapel announcement was called a "blow out," or, being interpreted, a farewell party. Whatever one may choose to name such a jolly, lighthearted time would be hard to name, much harder to describe.

COLLEGE EDUCATION AS A BUSINESS ASSET

Willamette Is Ideal Spot For Getting An All-Around Development to Fit Youth for Business or Professional Life

State Library Affords Exceptional Opportunities for Study and Research—Willamette is Standardized and Recognized as Equal of Any On Coast—Is Oldest and Most Historic Institution in West.

The program for commencement week at Willamette University has been announced in full and is as follows, beginning with Sunday:

June 11—Sunday, 11:30 a. m., baccalaureate sermon by Dr. Fletcher Homan, president of Willamette; 3 p. m., farewell meeting of the Christian associations; 8 p. m., address to the Christian associations by Rev. Henry Marcotte, of the Westminster Presbyterian church, Portland.

June 12—Reception in honor of the trustees of Willamette of 1853 at the Marion Hotel from 3 to 5 p. m., by President and Mrs. Homan and resident graduates. Invitations have been issued to former graduates and friends of the University; 8 p. m. inter-society oratorical contest between the Philodorian, Philodorian, Websterians and Adelantes. Miss Mary Hammond, in charge of the physical direction of Willamette women, will give an exhibition of her work in connection with the event.

July 13—10 a. m., meeting of the board of trustees of Willamette in Eaton Hall; 8 p. m., graduating recital of the College of Music in the First M. E. Church.

June 14—2:30 p. m., alumni business meeting in the chapel; 7:30 p. m., alumni reception and banquet at the Marion Hotel.

June 15—2:30 p. m., class day exercises of the Seniors of the College of Liberal Arts on the campus if weather is fair; 8 p. m., commencement exercises of the College of Liberal Arts of Willamette University in the First Methodist Church with an address by Rev. Dr. Young of Portland.

This issue sets forth, first, the potency of a collegiate training; secondly, the college course in relation to the

MATTHEWS SPEAKS TO ADELANTES

"Privileges and Duties of Senior" Was His Topic

Difference Between Dreaming Dreams and Having Ideals—Seniors Pre- sent Adelantes a Beautiful Landscape Picture.

Friday afternoon, June 2d, the Adelante society brought their year's work to a successful close with a culminating meeting for the express benefit of the Seniors. A piano duet by the Misses Proctor and Meyers furnished a delightful prelude to Professor Matthew's talk on the "Privileges and Duties of a Senior." In dealing with this subject, the speaker recalled some of the incidents of his own college career and elucidated the difference between dreaming dreams and having ideals. It is the privilege of a college graduate, he went on to say, to go up onto the heights of life and rise above some of its tragedy. Miss Laura Strong then sang that soulful song, "The End of a Perfect Day," and for a few minutes the Seniors had charge. As a token of the happy fellowship they had enjoyed among their sister-Adelantes they presented the society with a beautiful landscape picture finished in mellow tones of brown. For some minutes the girls gathered around those about to go forth from their halls, never to sustain the same relationship with them again and expressed wishes of good will.

In the business meeting afterwards next year's officers were elected. As a result, Miss Alta Altman is to be president; Ethel Casebere, vice-president; Mabel Magness, corresponding secretary; Elva Bartlett, recording secretary; Frances Pohle, treasurer; Esther Plummer, first directress; Lena Heist, first critic; Florence Metcalf, second critic; Alice Gregson, first usher and Lulu Heist, second usher.

Willamette.

The Seniors, of course, were present, and also a goodly number of the faculty and friends of the Associations. The ice (if there was any) was broken by dividing the crowd into groups, which vied with each other in things characteristic of college life only, a "stunt." Various and diverse were the same. Of especial note was the one in which De Long starred as an irate schoolmaster. The faculty gave in pantomime a meeting, at which they discussed whether the Seniors should be allowed to graduate or not. The Seniors very fittingly sang a round about the "sweetly singing donkey." J. B. C. Oakes, president of the Y. M. C. A., gave a few brief words of welcome, after which Margaret Graham of the Y. W. C. A., announced the program, which consisted of a duet by Misses Bradley and Edgington, music by the Glee Club quartette and a reading by J. A. McNees.

A wonderful human graphophone was then displayed by Prof. Oakes, and several "Buzz-Saw" records of interest were played on it. Among the list were take offs on the Seniors.

Delightful refreshments were served and the remainder of the evening was spent around the piano, where the famous Sophomore song caught the ear and voice of all present.

College Education as an Asset various professional and technical schools; thirdly, the realization of these in Willamette University.

The College Trained Man in the World of Affairs.

The following statement as to the advantages of college trained men over non-collegians is based upon "Who's Who in America," and calculations made by Dr. S. N. Fellows, President Thwing, and Bishop J. W. Bashford, formerly president of Ohio Wesleyan University.

It is estimated that only one-half of one per cent of the male population in this country receives a college education, and yet this small percentage has furnished one-third of the congressmen, one-half of the senators and vice-presidents, two-thirds of the presidents and secretaries of state, three-fourths of the associate judges, and seven-eighths of the justices of the supreme court of the United States. Three-fourths of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were college men. All the leaders in Lincoln's cabinet were college men. The conclusion from the above facts is that the collegian has seven hundred and fifty times as many chances of being an eminent statesman as other young men.

While one college man in forty gains distinction, only one in ten thousand non-collegians gains distinction. The collegian then has two hundred and fifty times the chance of obtaining recognition in "Who's Who in America" that the non-collegian has.

That this condition is true, not simply of the past, but of the present also and, indeed, increasingly so, is evidenced by the fact that of sixteen persons agreed upon as having achieved the greatest fame in the recent war with Spain, fourteen were college graduates, or eighty-seven and one-half per cent.

Seventy-one per cent of those who find a place in "Who's Who for 1910-11" are collegians. Of the 4,134 new names added to the list in "Who's Who" the last five years, 3,092 are collegians, indicating an increased proportion of collegians gaining recognition in the last few years. Of the lawyers gaining recognition in "Who's Who," two-thirds are collegians. Almost the same proportion of medical men gaining recognition are collegians. Of theologians, nine-tenths are collegians. Of those gaining distinction in technical lines, three-fifths are collegians. About one-sixth of those gaining distinction in art are collegians, and about one-fourth of those gaining distinction in music.

There has long been an impression that a college education furnishes no advantages for a life of business. Some have had the notion that a higher education stands in the way of money making by its requirements of time and money, which might otherwise give a young man an excellent start in business. Let us submit this impression to the facts furnished in the "Advantages of a College Education" by James W. Bashford, D. D.

"The first wealthy Rothschild was trained for the Jewish priesthood and then used his disciplined powers for laying the foundations of that great banking house. James Gordon Bennett, Sr., studied ten years for the priesthood and then abandoned the sanctuary for the editorial sanctum and

B. Astor completed a college course and then used his disciplined powers to add $50,000,000 to the Astor estates. A study of our commercial metropolis shows that some college graduates at least are men of affairs able to bring things to pass in the business world and to secure wealth. We have confined our observations to New York because New York is regarded as the financial but not the educational metropolis of the nation. But such emiused his trained intellect in founding one of the great newspapers of the country. A. T. Stewart was educated for the ministry, became a teacher and then turned his keen, trained mind to business and accumulated a fortune of $40,000,000. Samuel J. Tilden, who made millions and who left $5,000,000 to the New York library was the son of a farmer and a graduate of a New York university. Abram Hewitt, the incorruptible mayor of New York, the millionaire business man and partner of Peter Cooper, was a graduate of Columbia College. Henry Roosevelt, who made millions and left $2,000,000 to the Roosevelt Hospital of New York, is another example of the graduate in business. John A. Stevens, a Yale alumnus, was for thirty years president of the New York Bank of Commerce was the financial adviser of Chase and Lincoln, and the chairman of the committee which raised $150,000,000 for the government at the time of her sorest need during the Civil War. Theodore Roosevelt, Depew, Choate, Whitney, Fairchild, Lowe, the younger Astors and Vanderbilts are among the New York graduates who are successful business men. William Corcoran and Bell of Washington; Biddle, Rush and Pepper of Philadelphia; the Tudors, Adamses, Durent and the Lawrencees of Boston teach the same lesson.

It is not sufficient to mention names. Doubtless the opponent of college education can name many, like John Jacob Astor, Carnegie, Peter Cooper, Girard, Mackaye, Pullman, Peabody, Slater and Vanderbilt who never entered a college. But we must remember that as the colleges have furnished only one person in 750 of the men competing for wealth, they are entitled to only representative in 750 among the rich. A list of 100 of the wealthiest men in the United States was recently compiled, and their early lives were studied so far as possible. Sketches of eighty of these men were found; and the sketches showed that thirty of them or thirty-seven and a half per cent, were college graduates, and that twenty-eight persons out of the eighty, or thirty-five per cent, were furnished by the millions of American people having only a common school education. So far from a college training acting as a bar to wealth, according to these statistics it gives the young college graduate 277 times as many possibilities of becoming rich as his less educated brother enjoys.

A still better test of the relation between higher education and financial success is found in our secretaries of the treasury. These names are already furnished us, and they represent the ablest American financiers. But out of thirty-seven men who have been called to the highest financial position in the United States, twenty-four are college bred, seven more have had academic or professional training, while only six secretaries of the treasury have been furnished by the great mass of our people having a common school education. In other words a college education multiplies 487 fold the opportunities of a young man for reaching this eminent financial station in the United States.

Lack of space has restrained us from appealing to European history for richer and fuller illustration of the advantages of an education. We must, however, call attention in passing to the remarkable gains which Germany has made over the United Kingdom in industries and commerce during the last twenty years. The able commission appointed by the British Parliament to investigate this remarkable advance in German industries attributes the rapid increase of wealth in Germany to education—especially to the technological training recently added to the thorough general culture for which Germany has already become noted. In a word, the key to Germany's recent industrial progress, like the key to her triumph over France in 1870, is education. Here is an illustration of our principle on a national scale."

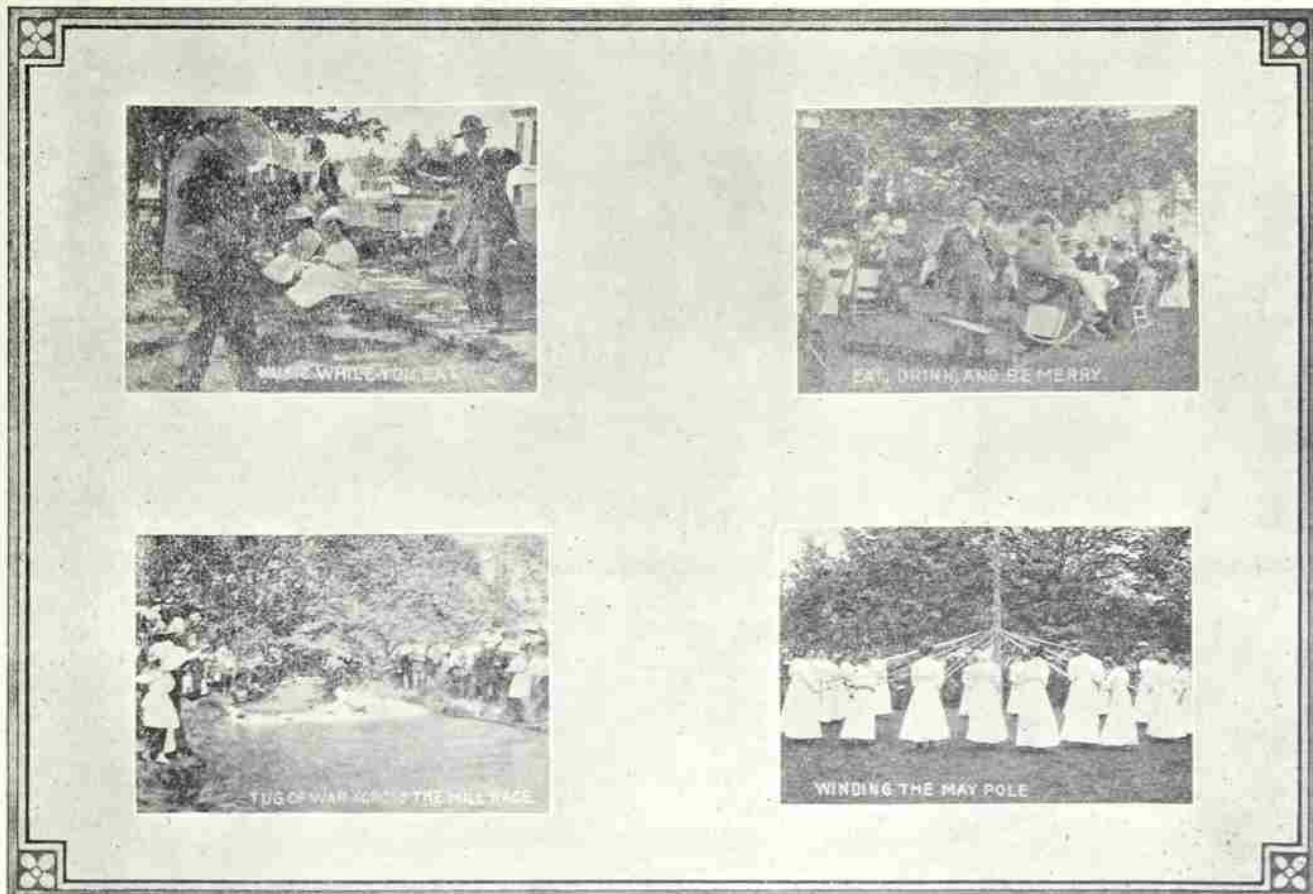

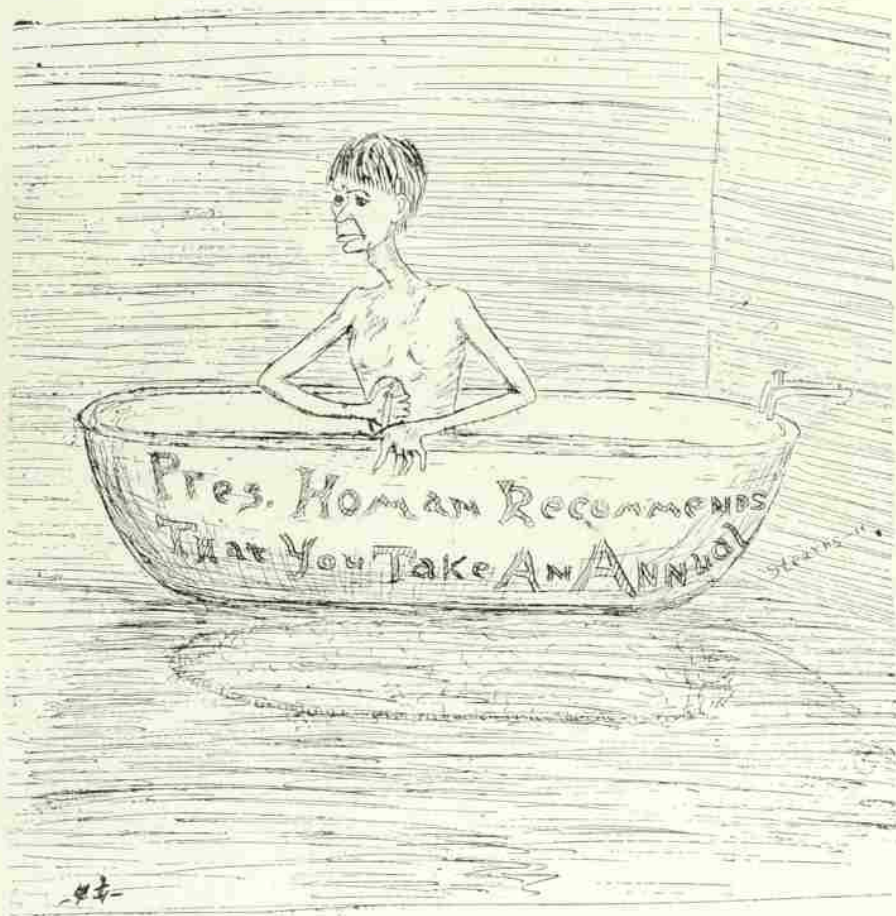

The advantages to one's family, and the mental and spiritual value of an education are, of course, incalculable though not as readily reducible to the test, "does it bake bread."

The College of Liberal Arts in Relation to Professional and Technical Studies.

The College of Liberal Arts as the door of approach to the professions and various vocations in life, furnishes a central and regulative body of studies. Mr. W. T. Harris has said: "Secondary education deals with the organization of facts into subordinate groups while higher education undertakes to organize these groups into one group. Higher education seeks as its chief goal, the unity of human learning. Then, in the second step, it specializes." An unfortunate tendency to specialization without a broad foundation as a basis breaks up the structure of higher knowledge into fragments. This kind of specialization results only in an intellectual fraction. "A true specialization has its indispensable value in exact determination of particulars and in accurately relating the particulars to the general."

Long ago, Goldsmith wrote of the men who contributed to obstruct the progress of wisdom by addicting their readers to one particular sect or some favored science. "They generally carried on a petty traffic in some little creek; within that, they busily plied about, and drove an insignificant trade but never ventured out into the great ocean of knowledge." Bruniere contended, "Not only the knowledge needed for a specialty but the knowledge and moral qualities which underlie and connect all specialties, are what make the scholar who is a man and thereby the man is to be the best scholar. As for particular ideas, our own—here is the most individual and, in consequence, the most eccentric thing in us. But the general ideas—here is the truly human in us, and consequently that in us which is most truly social."

The breaking up of knowledge into pieces and losing one's view of knowledge in its unified grandeur is a literal provincializing of learning. "The narrow intensity of vision along some little lane of knowledge blinds one's view to all scenery outside." The man who has taken a sweeping view around the horizon is the one best able to discern the place and size of one or another segment of the scene, and the scholar already trained in studies of universal value is the one who can be depended upon most surely to possess the wide ranging and well-balanced view." "He has at least a gazing acquaintance with the great-east constellations in the vast firmament of knowledge." A preliminary training in liberal studies is the best guarantee that a man will be whole minded; that he will be a citizen not only of the place where his special work lies but of the commonwealth of knowledge. The student in the College of Liberal arts of Willamette University has a chance for fellowship with students in all fields of liberal study as he may come into personal intercourse with scholars whose work lies in fields otherwise foreign. This is the best preventive against errors of judgment, which are otherwise sure to be made by the man who is solely a specialist. So long as the whole is greater than any part, this will remain true.

Sometimes scholars fail in life because they do not understand their fellow men. Many correctives to this tendency are afforded the students in our College of Liberal Arts by the fruitful and profitable community of students in higher studies, which mediates to them some knowledge of the world of men outside.

A Protest Against the Commercial Spirit.

In his address to the students of Carnegie Institute in Pittsburg recently, Mr. Carnegie said:

"Now in the struggle of life some of you may place upon yourself the ambition to be a multi-millionaire. That is a low ambition. The engineering professions you have chosen, for instance, are much higher and more worthy. Your first duty is to be self-maintaining, because if you are not that you will not possess those qualities of independence, aggressiveness and content that mark a true man.

"Surplus wealth is a great trust and should be administered for the good of the community. It does not add to human happiness, and if you have sons it may lead them astray. If I had my choice I would choose honest poverty rather than money. The ignorant man has no ambition but millions. The man who is educated does not care for money. As we progress we will find the desire for money decrease and the desire for service increase. Just imagine you were an Edison, or a Graham Bell or a Shakespeare, and then consider how gross it is for a man to accumulate surplus dollars and not have use for them. The iron business grew, you know, the millions would roll in, whether or no. I couldn't help it. I'm glad now they did, for as I look around me I see I have found good use for them. Don't let money be your god. That is the message I wish to leave you."

A Striking Instance of the Utilitarian's Contempt for Education.

"Near the middle of the eighteenth century came Pestalozzi, the father of modern education. His name was the rallying cry of the educational army. He began his work in obscurity and poverty when Napoleon's armies were sweeping through Switzerland. When some one approached Napoleon with an attempt to interest him in Pestalozzi's ideas he said scornfully that he had no time for A B C's. Poor shattered Germany took time, and when Queen Louise sent twelve young men to be trained for teachers at Yverdon, she gave her dynasty a power greater than Napoleon's cannons. When, during the late Franco-Prussian War, some one asked Von Moltke the secret of the superiority of the German army, he pointed to a group of common soldiers studying with intelligent interest the map of the country through which they were passing, and said, 'There it is.' in Versailles, crowned Kaiser William emperor of Germany, and pulled down the dynasty of the man who rashly sneered at A B C's."

Our Standing with Other Institutions.

Leland Stanford, Jr. University recognizes our work. One of our Sophomores has submitted his credits to this university and learned that he can complete the course in Liberal Arts, receiving the A. B. degree, together with that in law (a three year course), receiving the J. D. degree in three years. Ask Mr. Blanchard about this.

Another Sophomore submitted his credits to Princeton and found that they were recognized there. The Registrar informed him that the work of their Freshman and Sophomore years differs from ours so that he would have to do some work in each year but he would have other credits to carry to the Junior and Senior years. Mr. Rader can tell you about it.

A former student can tell you about our balanced course from the point of view of another eastern college—the

LUKE RADER

Woman's College of Baltimore. She is Miss Ryth Gatch.

The University of Washington sends the credits of a graduate student who has been doing resident work there to the extent of thirty-four credits, as he prefers to take his degree from Old Willamette. These credits are transferred and his thesis is submitted to the department here. This is for Samuel A. Siewert.

Earle A. Knott, A. B. (University of Oregon) is doing graduate work for the Master's degree here.

Rhoda Mae Hopkins came to Willamette at the beginning of the year, entering the Senior class with credits from Dakota Wesleyan University.

Lorena C. Belknap came to Willamette at the beginning of this semester bringing 101 college credits from Pacific University. Several others have come from various institutions with credits entitling them to advanced standing.

Some Advance Steps.

Plans have been made for a school of education for the training of high school teachers, and a teachers' training department for the training of teachers for the grammar school, as indicated very fully in the April bulletin which may be had upon application.

After this year the class periods are to be one hour in length. The increasing size of classes makes this necessary. Full credit, of course, will be given for work already completed, as the enactment of the hour period will not be made retroactive.

The arrangement of the work for next year enables the College of Liberal Arts of Willamette University, to meet all the requirement for standardization.

The tendency to separation of the Academy from the College is strongly marked among the students of the Academy who have already organized separate literary societies, one for the young men and one for the young ladies.

The Possibilities and Demands of the Future.

From the point of view of those who realize the mighty forces at work in our present day life, the complexity of the problems confronting us and the tremendous responsibilities resting upon us in the impending industrial evolution, a college education for those who are to cope with the situation and solve the intricate problems of the future, will be the utmost necessity.

On the other hand, it is refreshing to turn to an article in the Detroit News, "Twenty Years Ahead; A Statesman's View":

"Vibrant with splendid sympathies for our experiment in democracy, and for our destiny as a masterful nation, James Bryce, the British ambassador, gave the highest expression to his optimism in saying that within twenty years we will have reached the climax of our evolution from the raw material of nationhood, that the commercial instinct will then turn to the arts, to education, to culture, to leisure and to the humanities.

Here, indeed, is faith and cheerfulness. For twenty years is a short time. In this view of our swift progress our children will not live amid the crash of material things and the crush for the dollar, but they will be softened by leisure and the pursuit of culture. And yet, when one considers what has taken place within the last fifty years, who shall say that Mr. Bryce is overconfident, or premature in his prophecy?

The student community is of a high type.

There is a wholesome atmosphere. A strong democratic spirit prevails. One is not lost in a crowd. Expenses are unusually low.

The expenses for a comfortable home for young women at Lausanne Hall are very low.

The Co-operative Boarding Club secures board for young men at cost.

The give-and-take of social life in both communities is highly esteemed. Both knowledge and character are visibly and socially honored.

It is strategically located in the capital city of the state; its campus adjoining the state house.

Students here meet men of prominence in state affairs.

The student body becomes familiar with state activities at the seat of these activities.

The state institutions in the vicinity afford special opportunities for the study of social questions.

The state library affords the best opportunity in the state for the study of political science.

Its site is one of scenic beauty—a part of its best endowment.

Foundations may be laid here for careers in various lines, such as journalism, business and administration, etc. in association with students preparing for different fields of activity, giving a breadth of view unusual in vocational schools where all are working along narrower lines.

It has a college spirit of the right sort.

It has high class student musical clubs and organizations.

It has six excellent literary societies, two in the Academy, one for boys and one for girls and four in College, two for young women and two for young men.

It is the oldest in the west and there is none better.

A diploma from Willamette will be accepted anywhere.

There are successful athletic teams under a coach who has no superior in the northwest.

In every respect, everything is all right at Willamette.

CLASS DAY EXERCISES.

The Senior class day exercises of the College of Liberal Arts will take place on Thursday afternoon, June 15, at 2:30, on the college campus.

Tennis is a favorite sport at Willamette. There are three courts on the campus. Officers of the association above.

And can this attitude be a tereed in twenty years, as Mr. Bryce so optimistically prophesies? Materially so. If not in twenty, then in forty. Another generation will see a decided transformation of social ideals. With the tremendous vitality of the American people diverted to these ideals there is no reason why we cannot surpass here the achievements of any race, "the glory that was Greece, and the grandeur that was Rome." We shall produce here a nation of artificers like those who built the cathedrals of Europe, a nation of painters like those who filled the art treasuries of the old world, and a nation of writers and poets who know not the "six best sellers." If Greece produced hers in two centuries, we can produce ours in less.

Pithy and Pointed.

"The grounds of a man's culture lie even what he believes but find out what he loves. Here is the real man. Get hold of that and you get hold of him."

"In four years, one gets insight enabling him to decide various phases of problems of life in light of general human learning."

Locke speaks of, "Teeming truths rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and like the lights of heaven are not only beautiful and entertaining in themselves but give light and evidence to other things that without them could not be seen or known."
Why Attend the College of Liberal Arts of Willamette University.

Because—
It is a Christian college but not sectarian.
Eighty per cent of all college students are in Christian colleges.
The college courses are well balanced.
It meets the conditions for standardization.

A departure from the usual order of things will be instituted in that the exercises will be held out of doors. Several other new features will be given, which at present, are a profound secret. The event will be spectacular, but dignified and stately, withal, as befitting the time, the place and the participants.

PROF. AND MRS. VON ESCHEN ENTERTAIN THE SENIORS

Truly good things come to him who waits.

On last Monday, June 5, Prof. and Mrs. Von Eschen invited the Seniors to their home for the evening.

Mrs. Von Eschen honored the class by wearing the colors, white and green. The fire place proved one of the main attractions of the evening as it gleamed and crackled. The time was spent quite informally and a quiet restful atmosphere prevailed.

A Freshman examination in physiology was successfully passed, after much labor and quizzing of the professor.

Guy Woods carried away the prize of a picture of a Senior upon which he most successfully pinned a bow in place while blind folded. The attempts of some of the class in this contest were laughable, and three walls of the room were adorned with bows.

Delicious "homey" refreshments were served, consisting of home made cake, marguerites and strawberries with lots of sugar and cream.

Then the lights were turned out and the girls sat on the floor around the fire place and toasted marshmallows, and fed them to the boy, who heroically swallowed them down, smoke and all.

With three cheers for the Von Eschens the Seniors departed voting the good time worth four college years of good hard work.

What the Websterians did Wednesday evening, May 31. The first number was a reading by Martin Schreiber, entitled "Old Ace." The subject was a good one and caused the members to smile several times. Next was a guitar solo, by Mr. Waehlte. This was also good. The debate: "Resolved that the stand taken by the insurgents in Mexico is justifiable," went to the negative. Those on the affirmative Wm. Schreiber and Henry Richter, those on the negative Harold Jory and Arthur Marsh. Prof Cramer, the only visitor for the evening, responded to the president's invitation to say a few words, by telling about the value of the literary society in one's college career. He urged that everyone while at college should join some society and take an active part in the same. We are always glad to welcome visitors, and wish all to come again. After a short recess came, as usual, parliamentary practice and other routine business. The most interesting, however, was the critic's report. This is usually a very interesting and instructive part of the society's work, and this time it was especially good and consisted of several "roasts," well seasoned. Much amusement was caused and adjournment came all too soon. As this will probably be the last regular meeting this year the reporter wishes to add the postscript, "Nuf sed."

ACADEMY GIRLS LITERARY SOCIETY

The Academy girls met last Thursday and adopted a constitution, and elected officers for their society. Election was as follows:

President, Miss Avison; vice-president, Miss Poulson; secretary, Esther Emmel; treasurer, Miss Ashby; 1st directress, Miss Emmel; 2d directress, Miss Todd; usher, Miss Pearce; chaplain, Miss Humphrey.

Several committees were appointed and another meeting arranged for in the near future in which affairs will be completely completed.

PHILOSOPHANS ELECT OFFICERS

Friday afternoon the Philosophians had their last regular meeting of the school year.

Catharine Carson opened the program with a pleasing piano solo. She was obliged to respond to the hearty encore. Mrs. McCain read a description of the New York library which is soon to be opened and Stella Graham sang. She too, was obliged to respond to an encore so appreciative was her audience. A letter of thanks from the Philosophians was read which was followed by an interesting drill on parliamentary practice.

After this officers were elected for the next school year. These officers are as follows: president, Pearl Bradley; vice-president, Lola Belle Cook; secretary, Stella Graham; vice-secretary, Ethel Lewton; treasurer, Gertrude Reeves; censor, Margart Graham; sergeant-at-arms, Mildred Bartholomew; Collegian reporter, Grace Edgington

A short business session followed the election. After the censor's report, the society adjourned.

All the girls are very optimistic concerning the future and see big things ahead for their beloved society.

SOPHOMORE SONG WILL BE PUBLISHED

The Sophomore song, winner of the Freshman glee, 1911, will be published in regular sheet music form. About one hundred students have agreed to take copies at 25 cents each to guarantee the publication of the song. The music should find a sale for the price at any music store. Any person wishing a copy of a Willamette University song, can secure it by sending 25 cents with name and address to R. L. Smith, or H. C. Harter, Salem, Oregon.
