Fellow Alumni:

Those Alumni and former students who live in or relatively near Salem have witnessed a dramatic transformation in Willamette's campus during the 1960's. And, just as the physical qualities of a University are subject to change so are its educational qualities.

Fortunately for Willamette University, its administrative leadership is keeping the doors of communication wide open. If the past few years are any indication of what lies ahead for colleges and universities throughout the nation, then we are surely entering an era whose requirements for communication are as different from those of the past decade, as those of the past decade were different from previous decades.

Campus change, then, is admittedly inevitable. What we need to do and can do is to help insure that this is a positive and not a negative change. Alumni involvement can take many forms. Taking an interest in top prospective students, and supporting financially both Loyalty Fund and building programs and volunteer service are among the best ways we have to express our interest.

Living near Salem, I have had good opportunity to revisit Willamette many times during the past few years. Walking down the many paths that connect campus building reminds me of the years when nearly everyone you met said hello. Today, the faces are different, but that friendly attitude is still there. Perhaps this attitude is the reason for Willamette's responsible student behavior during the recent nation-wide university turmoil. Willamette Alumni also have much to be proud of because as students of previous years their attitude helped make W. U. what it is today. So far Willamette has been unspoiled and its chances of continuing so are enhanced by increasing alumni involvement.

Our Last Issue

Publication of the Willamette Alumnus and the quarterly Willamette Scene for alumni, parents, and others on the University mailing list will cease with this issue.

Instead, the University will experiment with the publication of a newspaper tabloid. The tabloid will be edited by the University and printed by the Statesman-Capital Journal newspapers in Salem for their combined circulation of 63,000, with an over-run of 11,000 for mailing to former recipients of the Alumnus and Scene.

You will receive your first of five issues of the tabloid in October. Others are scheduled for December, February, April and June. Classnotes and alumni news will be carried in a special insert every other issue starting in December for alumni only.

The shift to a tabloid is not new in college publications, but to our knowledge, Willamette's will be the first to appear with two daily newspapers. The University will be solely responsible for the content of each tabloid. Advertising will not be carried. An editorial board of alumni, faculty, students and administrative staff will determine the contents of each issue.

Commercial printing appearance will be sacrificed in the switch over for the advantages of greater circulation, more news space, less cost and greater flexibility. Newsprint has obvious limitations in beauty, but the advantages (including a yearly $3,000 savings) were the determining factors in the decision to change.

We hope to keep you and the newspaper readers in the Willamette Valley better informed on the events, people, plans and progress of the Willamette community.

LONDON'S Trafalgar Square was just one of the stops on the six-week, eight-country, 23-concert tour by the Willamette University Choir and Musical Kaleidoscope this past summer. Seventy-five vocalists and instrumentalists participated under the direction of choral director Walter Farrier and band director Maurice Brennen. The group was well received and was accorded some glowing reviews.

A Memorable Concert Tour

Taking a journey "we'll never forget," a party of 75 singers and instrumentalists called the Willamette University Kaleidoscope took its first European tour, performing in eight countries.

Choir member Randy Nickelsen noted "we performed everywhere from cathedrals and abbeys to market places; from universities and schools to sidewalks in Paris at 6 a.m. We were received by mayors, Lord provosts and burgermeisters all over the continent."

Directed by Walter Farrier (choir) and Maurice Brennen (band), the Kaleidoscope launched its musical sojourn in Edinburgh, Scotland. The group was hosted by the famous Glasgow Phoenix Choir in Glasgow and were guests in private homes. "You just wouldn't believe how friendly and hospitable the Scots were," exclaimed Farrier.

The tour continued to London, through

Belgium to Germany, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland, and France. Among some of the highlights were a Dixieland band performance on a boat trip on the Rhine River; participation in the famous Vienna Music Festival; visit to the site of "The Sound of Music" in Salzburg, and the trip to Bratislava, Czechoslovakia, where the famous Slovak Teacher's Choir hosted the visitors who were official guests of the government . . . and "constantly watched by Russian agents."

After feeling the "weight" of the Iron Curtain, Miss Nickelsen wrote in a letter to her parents: "My heart was really full of something for all of those people. When you think about how much we can sit and gripe about our government and Vietnam, etc., without mentioning all that we have . . . I would give everything to give these people a little of what we have. It made me homesick . . . and maybe just a little bit humble."

More Computer Activities

Increased computer application on the campus is the intent of a $28,700 National Science Foundation grant awarded to computer science instructor Walter Yungen.

Yungen, who successfully guided the University's IBM 1130 through its sophomore year, will spend this next year in residency with a computer research team at the Systems Development Corp. at Santa Monica. Next summer he hopes to implement new computing activities on campus involving many more departments, faculty and students.

Along with instructional benefits in the natural science areas, economics and sociology, the computer has aided student registration, course scheduling, curriculum reporting gift records and a newly formed Office of Institutional Research.

Computer "Fun 'n Games"

Among the computer enthusiasts is economics chairman Dr. Richard Gillis. After experimenting a year with the computer for his management simulation class, he groomed a squad of four majors to participate in the Sixth Annual Intercollegiate Business Simulation Competition hosted by the University of Nevada at Reno this past year. (Continued)

COLLECTIVE Willamette careers spanning 147 years are represented by these six retirees who responded to President Roger Fritz's call for recognition at the last faculty meeting in May. They are, from left, Ralph Dobbs, Associate Professor of Piano (27 years); Richard Petrie, Financial Vice President (16); Dr. Marion Morange, Professor of Romance Language (39); Dr. Murco Ringnald, Professor of English (30); Marija Udris, Associate Professor of German and Russian (12); and Dr. John Rademaker, Professor of Sociology and Anthropology (23).

For three months, students from 14 colleges in six Western states made quarterly business decisions each week as a company within a hypothetical industry. The computer would digest all of the decisions and print out the results of operations for each company. Each company was run by the students for a simulated five year period and a panel of business experts analyzed the final results toward the prizes.

Willamette won its division over Oregon State, Northern Arizona University and Sacramento College and finished among the leaders overall.

More Faculty

The faculty rolls are up. Five of 19 new faculty members are additions in the departments of art, philosophy, sociology, theatre and music education. Among the 14 replacements (for retirees and others who have departed) are four in the College of Law, a pianist in the College of Music, and nine in the College of Liberal Arts.

Three administrative posts have been filled, including the Director of Alumni Relations, University Center Director and Assistant to the President. Roger K. Kirchner, a 1965 graduate of Willamette and a master's degree candidate at Portland State, is the new Alumni Director. Kirchner served three years with the U.S. Army, separating as a First Lieutenant. He was the Adjutant of the Second Battalion, 6th Infantry in Berlin, Germany, for two years.

Intervisitation Runs Smoothly

"No problems" was the dual response of the personnel deans in summation of dormitory intervisitation which went into effect last spring. A maximum 18½ hours a week of visitation is permitted in the private rooms of the living organizations by members of the opposite sex. Intervisitation must be approved by two-thirds majority in each house.

All of the men's living organizations voted maximum hours — 1:30 to 5 p.m. on Wednesdays and Sundays, 8 p.m. to midnight on Fridays and 4:30 p.m. to midnight Saturdays. Doney and Lee voted maximum, while Lausanne, York and Chi Omega voted fewer hours and the other four sororities awaited rulings from their national offices on intervisitation.

Track, Tennis Claim Trophies

It was mid-year before more room was needed in the Bearcat athletic trophy case. Surprising performances in track and tennis finally produced championship hardware.

Chuck Bowles' spikers, rated no better than third before the championship meet, came up with six individual firsts, dethroning Lewis and Clark and squelching Pacific Lutheran's title bid.

Veteran tennis coach Lestle Sparks got the other surprise in his 44th year of coaching. When a rash of court upsets had cleared, his top two players had gained six points without an individual title and slipped past LC, PLU and Whitman.

John Lewis' defending baseball champions suffered through a feast or famine season at the plate to finish fourth with a 9-7 record, while Bearcat golfers finished second.

Football fortunes this fall are expected to be considerably brighter than last year's 2-7 showing. Coach Ted Ogdahl has 30 lettermen and some fine frosh and transfers to groom for the Sept. 19 opener at Eastern Washington State College in Cheney, Wash. The remainder of the eight-game schedule includes: Oct. 3, University of Nevada; Oct. 10, College of Idaho (Parents' Weekend); Oct. 17, at Lewis and Clark; Oct. 24, Linfield; Oct. 31, Pacific Lutheran (Homecoming); Nov. 7, at Pacific; and Nov. 14, at Whitman.

Squirrel Theft Raises Ruckus

Squirrelnappers caused a small furor on the campus in March. On at least four occasions, persons were observed trapping the resident eastern gray squirrels. Students hastily organized an SOS (Save Our Squirrels) drive which extended all the way to the governor. Governor Tom McCall received a petition bearing 450 signatures asking him to declare the squirrels on Willamette's campus and the capital grounds an endangered species.

One of the poachers came forward and admitted taking five of the furry beasts from the campus to inhabit the trees near his home. These and some others were returned and the squirrel colony which dates back to the 1880's appears to be thriving anew.

Reporting on higher education in trouble ... a tightening job market for new Ph.D.-holders

■ New Directions? It was not exactly a year to inspire optimism. At the close of academic 1969-70, perhaps more than at any other time in its history, American higher education was a system in trouble—beset by the gravest uncertainties about its strength, its security, and its purpose. Two broad questions seemed to stand out:

—Could the system, after widespread campus disruption, violence, and political involvement, succeed in its educational mission?

—Would the system have the financial resources it needed in the years ahead?

The questions were not unrelated. Already shaken by inflation and by cutbacks in the growth of federal aid, the colleges now saw evidence of further financial problems as a consequence of campus unrest. The cost of insuring college buildings, for example, was rising sharply. So were the interest rates for dormitory bond issues. The Internal Revenue Service, meanwhile, was investigating whether certain campus political activities violated the basis of institutions' federal tax exemptions.

In Congress, the mood was described by a supporter of higher education as one of "subconscious resistance" to providing additional funds for colleges. And an influential Senate committee suggested that federal appropriations be reduced "proportionately" if an institution closed before the end of the year—as many, in fact, had done.

Some academic leaders themselves questioned whether campus political action, directed mainly against the war in Indochina, was not threatening the intellectual aims of higher education. Speaking at a commencement ceremony, one administrator asserted that, while the university community should "contribute meaningfully to the political process," a college or university had to "remain faithful to its primary purpose" of seeking and transmitting knowledge. Another speaker warned that higher education could end up in "utter shambles" if it strayed from the university's "central mission as an intellectual institution."

■ Black Frustration: "We come to express the anger, outrage, and frustration of the black people of this nation. We wish to convey to you the disenchantment of blacks, especially black youth, with our society and with the federal government."

The statement, from the presidents of 15 predominantly black colleges, was delivered personally to President Nixon a few days after police fire killed two black students at Jackson State College in Mississippi. The meeting was similar to an earlier White House session in which Mr. Nixon conferred with eight university presidents about student unrest that followed the killing of four students by National Guardsmen at Kent State University in Ohio.

President Nixon responded to both of those meetings by naming a member of each administrative delegation as a temporary special adviser. One of them, President James E. Cheek of Howard University, said there would be "disastrous" results if the national Administration did not react with "deeds" to the concerns of black students and colleges. The other adviser, Chancellor G. Alexander Heard of Vanderbilt University, reported that many students and faculty members thought the President could help ease campus unrest only by changing American war policy.

■ Doctoral Boom? A few years ago, recalls the dean of one graduate school, a bright young scholar with a Ph.D. could take his choice of several academic job offers. Now a new doctorate-holder "has to do some real hard digging to come up with one." The dean's comment reflects what may prove to be the tightest academic job market of the past decade. Actual unemployment is considered unlikely, but many Ph.D.'s are being forced to accept temporary appointments or less appealing jobs than they had hoped for.

Some observers think the situation will lead to a serious oversupply of Ph.D.'s. Others blame a lack of funds, rather than an excess of Ph.D.'s, as the main reason for fewer job openings. In their view, Ph.D. production continues to lag behind the manpower needs of most public four-year colleges and community colleges.

■ Father Figure: Harried college presidents may find something of value in a psychiatrist's recent analysis of why they are confronted so often by rebellious students. The heart of the matter, according to Dr. A. M. Nicholi II of Harvard University, is that many campus activists come from homes where their fathers frequently were absent—and they feel rejected by campus administrators who seem to them to be just as unreachable as their fathers used to be.

"Rejection invariably gives rise to resentment and anger," says Dr. Nicholi. "Today's youth possess a peculiarly intense sensitivity to remote, invisible, and unresponsive authority." His advice to presidents: be accessible.

CIRCUMSTANCE WITH POMP

Inauguration, Commencement Combine Smoothly

Dr. Roger Fritz Formally Becomes 17th President

A WARM smile and firm handshake from President Fritz awaited the 270 degree recipients.

COMMENCEMENT is a significant circumstance in itself, but the 270 degree candidates in May had theirs with a little extra pomp. They shared top billing with Dr. Roger J. Fritz who was inaugurated as the 17th President of the University in the May 17, 1970 ceremonies.

The Inaugural, something the University hadn't seen since Dr. G. Herbert Smith assumed office in 1942, attracted delegates from 140 colleges, universities and learned societies, as well as about 3,200 parents, alumni, friends and special guests.

As the nervous smiles worn by committee members who planned the affair broadened into an afterglow of achievement, success was evident. In short, the Commencement Inauguration ceremonies were a beautiful and memorable caper to a smoothly run weekend of events.

But there were some anxious moments. Just as the President was due to leave the scene of the Inaugural luncheon at the University Center to make his way to the head of the academic procession, he discovered that his speech manuscript was locked in his car and his wife Kathryn had the keys at home.

A calm call home and a quick return to the campus by Mrs. Fritz liberated his brief case in time for a hurried trip to the front of the procession. From that point, the two-hour ceremony under sunny skies proceeded without a hitch as he received the myrtlewood medallion signifying his authority, delivered a provocative address (see pages 11-13) and greeted each graduate with a warm smile, firm handshake and a hard-earned degree.

A good friend of Dr. Fritz, Dr. Robert K. Burns, Director of the Industrial Relations Center of the University of Chicago with a distinguished background as an educator, author, consultant and businessman, delivered the commencement address on "Resolving Conflict and Solving Problems in the Seventies." He and U.S. Congresswoman Edith Green '31, who addressed the alumni banquet audience the previous night, both received honorary doctorates.

Geo. H. Atkinson, chairman of the Willamette Board of Trustees, issued the investiture proclamation, noting that "(Dr. Fritz), we have asked you to undertake an almost impossible job; but after some months of experience with you we know that you are going to more than fulfill our highest expectations."

Among the interested onlookers was President Emeritus Smith who had slipped unnoticed into the audience. When singled out by President Fritz, Dr. Smith, with a hint of relief, told a fellow onlooker "It's a pleasure to see the ceremonies from this side for a change." While Dr. Smith had received his emeritus diploma in January during a special tribute to him and his wife, five other retirees were introduced as emeritus recipients, Ralph Dobbs, Dr. Marion Morange, Richard Petrie, Dr. John Rademaker and Dr. Murco Ringnalda.

Dr. and Mrs. Fritz help welcome U.S. Congresswoman Edith Green '31 as the banquet speaker. Mrs. Green, who received an honorary doctorate the next day, expressed great concern over what she terms "a crisis in education at all levels."

The logistics of staging the Commencement/Inauguration and Alumni Day during the same weekend were encumbered somewhat when the committee learned five months ahead of time that every motel and hotel room from Albany to Woodburn was booked for that weekend by Elks participating in a statewide convention. A housing solution for about 200 out-of-towners turned out to be a highlight, as Lausanne and Doney Halls became family residences for the weekend. And while the facilities haven't received Best Western or AAA ratings, many of the guests expressed gratitude for the accommodations and hospitality.

Hospitality was featured in another special way, through the participation of over 100 alumni who served as co-hosts with the University to the institutional delegates. The Alumni hosts accompanied the delegates to the day's events and marched with them in the academic procession.

Activities provided a thorough test for the new Putnam University Center which served as headquarters and adapted to the presidential display, meeting and dining needs of the weekend in fine style. (450 people were served at the Inaugural luncheon).

Mrs. Green told the 250 alumni banquet guests she had great concern for what she called "a crisis in education at all levels." Physical dissent has filtered down from colleges to high schools and even elementary schools, she said. "The public's level of tolerance of physical dissent is nearing the precipice of outright rejection, placing in jeopardy State and Federal funding of education bills," she warned.

Dr. Burns' commencement address complemented Mrs. Green's remarks, as he outlined the serious concerns of the future and noted that problem solving — as opposed to withdrawal, smoothing over, compromising and the use of force — remains the best way of rationally resolving conflict within and without the key institutions of each local community. He defined problem solving as "problem centered dialogue and discussion that makes possible the application of reason to the handling of issues in dispute," and then outlined the requisites and requirements in problem solving to reduce conflict and find solutions.

1970 Alumni Citation Recipients

The Alumni Citation Award was established in 1957 to give recognition, before the community and the nation, to distinguished graduates for outstanding achievements and services which reflect honor upon Willamette University.

GEORGE BIRRELL '29

Students prize gifted teachers and parents praise them for their excellence. George Birrell earns this dual admiration and more as a chemistry teacher at South Salem High School, a position he has held for 28 years.

In 1968, Mr. Birrell was named Oregon's outstanding teacher by the Chemical Industry Council of the Pacific Northwest. Last year he was one of six national recipients of the James Bryant Conant Award for High School Chemistry Teaching, an honor bestowed by the E.I. du Pont de Nemours and Co. to recognize, encourage and stimulate outstanding teachers of high school chemistry.

Mr. Birrell earned his master's degree from Oregon State University in 1959. He was named Science Man of the Year by the Salem Capital Journal in 1962 and served as president of the Oregon Science Teachers Association from 1963-64.

Three articles by this distinguished teacher and scholar have been published in the American Chemical Society's publication "Chemistry." He has also served on the summer faculties at the University of Florida, University of Redlands and Earlham College in laboratory programs supported by the National Science Foundation for high school chemistry teachers.

NEIL B. HUTCHINSON '61

The highly skilled support team for America's Apollo space missions has won the respect and admiration of all mankind. Neil Hutchinson is part of that team as an aerospace technologist with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) Manned Spacecraft Center in Houston, Texas.

For the past three years, Hutchinson has served as Assistant Chief of the Command and Service Module Systems Branch of the Flight Control Division. He supervises 45 engineers, mathematicians and physicists in the branch which is responsible for all Center flight control activities associated with the electrical, environmental, communications, guidance, and control and propulsion systems in the Apollo Command and Service Modules.

Hutchinson has personally served as a Guidance Officer and Guidance, Navigation and Control Systems Engineer for the Apollo Command and Service Module systems in the mission operations control room during five Apollo missions.

For five years, Hutchinson served in the Mission Planning and Analysis Division. He operated a control console in the real time computing complex during six Gemini and four Apollo missions. He has received three NASA Group Achievement Awards, two sustained superior performance awards and two outstanding performance awards in his eight years with NASA.

Dr. Simerville

Rep. Smith

CLARA JASPER SIMERVILLE '28

Because Clara Simerville believes that history can be influenced effectively through individual effort, she has been guided by personal involvement in an educational career of significant accomplishment. She is currently in her 15th year as Foreign Student Counselor at Oregon State University.

Her interest in Foreign student counseling, gerontology, and world affairs has led to numerous research projects, published articles, community service and worldwide travels.

With a master's degree in sociology from the University of Oregon and a doctorate in counseling from Oregon State University, Dr. Simerville has taught sociology at Willamette (1947) and OSU (1950-51) as well as through statewide general extension classes.

Listed in Who's Who of American Women, Dr. Simerville has received various travel grants and awards, including a Rockefeller grant for study in Africa. She was Oregon's delegate to the White House Conference on Aging in 1961. She has held leadership positions in the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs, Oregon State Commission on Aging, Oregon Commission for UNESCO, Willamette Valley World Affairs Council, American Red Cross, and various other professional and community organizations. For the past four years she has been director of the English Language Institute at OSU.

Her professional travels and research have led her to Europe, Africa, East Asia, the Middle East, Mexico, and the Caribbean countries. Among her 10 publications is an orientation handbook for Asian Students in its sixth printing.

ROBERT F. SMITH '53

The first man in Oregon political history to serve two terms as Majority Leader of the House of Representatives, Robert Smith has had a distinctive career in Oregon politics. In 1960, at the age of 29, he was the youngest member of the House, representing Harney, Grant and Lake Counties. He was re-elected by increasing majorities in the four succeeding campaigns and was elected Speaker of the House in 1969, becoming the first man from Harney County to serve as Speaker.

From 1965 to 1969 he served as Chairman of the Legislative Interim Committee on Public Lands. The Committee report was hailed by the National Conference of State Legislative Leaders as one of the outstanding legislative reports in the nation for 1969. During the 1965 and 1967 sessions he served as Chairman of the influential House Committee on State and Federal Affairs.

As Speaker, he instituted several legislative reforms, including creation of a House Committee on Urban Affairs and creation of Special House Task Forces to examine specific problem areas of state government.

Smith was named Junior First Citizen of Harney County in 1957 and is a past president of the Harney County Chamber of Commerce. He was listed as one of Oregon's Three Outstanding Men in 1961 and one of America's Ten Outstanding Young Men in 1965 and 1966.

Between legislative sessions, he is a business man and cattle rancher in Harney County.

RACHAEL DUNAVEN YOCOM '37

Combining her nationally recognized authority in the field of modern dance with abilities in teaching, administration and writing, Dr. Rachael Yocom has served 15 distinctive years as Chairman of the Dance Department of the School of Performing Arts, a division of the noted Fiorello H. La Guardia High School of Music and the Arts in New York City.

After receiving her master's degree at the University of Oregon, she taught physical education and dance at the College of Idaho, Utah State and at New York University where she earned her doctorate as a Research Fellow.

When the Steinberg Award was presented to Dr. Yocom in 1961, the inscription stated "... for your enormous accomplishment in instilling in the young people who attend your school extraordinary high standards of excellence in preparing for professional careers and for a life of good citizenship."

Dr. Yocom's widespread professional activities include consultant work in elementary, secondary and higher education for the state of New York, director of the scholarship program in the Arts for Radio City Music Hall, treasurer of the National Regional Ballet Association, and dance administrator of the Utah State University Opportunity Theatre since 1958.

She is a member of the Author's Guild and has co-authored three books in the fields of physical education, modern dance and recreation. She also writes poetry, fiction, magazine articles, children's stories and has served as substitute columnist for the New York Times. She is listed in Who's Who of American Women and the Dance Encyclopedia.

Where Will We Find Renewal? Renewal? Renewal?

The Inaugural Address by President Roger Fritz describes some of the problems he faces on the firing line of college administration and offers some realistic approaches to converting these problems to opportunities in improving human condition.

THIS is a significant day at Willamette! For the class of 1970 completing their undergraduate work. It is a day when sights are set on new opportunities in a great variety of fields. For those completing advanced degrees, this is the day when one crosses over the threshold and begins to concentrate on full-time endeavors as a professional.

For me there is great personal significance because 20 years after completion of my own undergraduate degree, I find myself addressing another class which I have joined, in a sense, as Willamette's president.

I am pleased and proud to be associated with Willamette University. In particular I appreciate those who have made this day possible: the committee members who have worked long and hard, every participant in this program — especially Messrs. Notson and Atkinson who, having met with me on several occasions prior to accepting Willamette's presidency, recommended to their fellow trustees that I might be useful here. I am pleased also that Mrs. Green has taken time from her busy schedule so that her alma mater might honor her, and that my good friend, Bob Burns, has come to Oregon so that we might recognize his distinguished contributions in a variety of leadership positions.

On this occasion it seems most appropriate to look ahead. But to do that requires some historical perspective. Let's look briefly then at the past in terms of what has brought us to this day and the present in terms of major current problems and opportunities.

The Past: (What has brought Willamette to this day?)

Many factors stand out, of course, but chief among them are these: dedicated leadership — sound academic policies and programs — worthy traditions — and the devotion and sacrifice of thousands and thousands of individuals who saw in this institution the best means of perpetuating those principles, beliefs, and ideals which they wanted to outlive them.

We have arrived at this day a strong university and are fortunate that this is so, for only the strong institutions will be able to cope with the problems being thrust upon them from all sides. We seem many days to be caught up in an intellectual and emotional whirlwind which finds us grasping for eternal truths and finding only temporary values — searching for basic codes of conduct and finding only elusive and everchanging standards. This was all capsuled for me recently by a contributor to LIFE magazine whose article was entitled, "I Can't Explain Heroin Addiction. I Can Only Tell What Happened to One Child — Mine."

"We are all suffering in this age, young and old, ghetto and gilded. Nuclear bombs make us expendable, moon rockets render us insignificant, computers know everything about us and care nothing. Extinction threatens from fouled air, from moral and physical homicide committed by social and political monoliths. It may be that only tough, plasticized emotions survive."

The question we must ask as we review our past is: If institutions like Willamette are not able to help us find better answers to these kinds of problems — where will they be found? On whom will we depend for the rational analysis and exploration of alternatives? What will be the source of our leadership? How will we avoid being unduly influenced by the raw power maneuvers (political or military) which have characterized most other governments, both ancient and modern?

The Present: (Major current problems and opportunities)

Along with a proper regard for the past, it is incumbent upon each new university administration to carefully analyze major current problems. The challenge, it seems to me, is to see how many of these problems can be converted into opportunities. It is in this light that I would cast the following five areas which are seriously handicapping our progress.

1. Under-involvement

At almost every hand there is evidence that the university experience is becoming too impersonal. At the large institutions this is quite obvious and the sheer force of numbers alone have, in the eyes of many experts, been the major cause for student unrest. But we must remember that there is no guarantee that smaller enrollments automatically bring closer, interpersonal relationships within the university. Even in schools such as Willamette, faculty, students, and administrators must work hard at becoming better listeners and be attentive daily to the legitimate concerns and involvements of other members of the community.

We are also under-involved in most colleges and universities in that we have neglected continuing education services to our alumni and residents of the areas in which we live. Stated simply, we can no longer afford aloof professionalism and must work carefully to see that our intellectual pursuits yield benefits in improvement of the human condition.

2. Goals and objectives are poorly defined

It is in this area that I often think of the truth of the old adage, "If you don't know where you're going, any road will get you there!" We must begin to give more thought and attention to accountabilities — to measured progress — to the arrangement of priorities such that we are constantly attacking the jobs that most need to be done. All too often there is evidence that we focus far too much attention on problems that no longer exist or are so steeped in tradition that we continue to perform without regard to real need. Until these habit patterns are changed, we will, in many respects, continue to be our own worst enemy in higher education.

3. Appraisals of performance are neglected

We have not provided adequately for the appraisals of the accomplishments of individuals and groups. We must not allow ourselves to be obstacles to change but rather must become promoters of it. It is most unfortunate when extreme actions seem to be the only way of coping with complacency. Better and more effective peer judgments among faculty members and administrators are absolutely essential if the pace of progress in higher education is to be improved. Similarly, students must assume greater responsibility for self discipline and improved regulatory policies and procedures as they gain more and more approval for their self-determination requests.

4. Materialistic accumulation overshadows our humanistic concerns

Our society is oriented more toward things than people. Billy Graham whose evangelistic missions have taken him all over the world asking questions of young people detects what he considers to be the basic human ingredients among them to be: "The need for love, the need for understanding, and the need for purpose." Sometimes I think we are missing tremendous opportunities on our college and university campuses in fulfilling this need for purpose simply because we are not available to each other enough. The answer is not easy, given limited resources, but we must continue to try to reestablish the human priorities involved in fulfilling our educational mission.

Although I will not dwell on the many personal thoughts which cross one's mind on an occasion like this, I do want you all to know how grateful I am for the love, understanding, and support which my parents, my wife, and my family have given me every year of my life. If there would be one blessing which I had the power to bestow on each of you who are receiving degrees today, it would be this type of sustaining love and mutual respect.

5. We are handicapped by credentials barriers

Our stress on credentials is detracting from the more legitimate need for initiative, accomplishment and accountability. We are concentrating on where a man has been and superficial indications of competence rather than what he is and what he can do. All too often we find ourselves merely "going through the motions," to achieve something we are not really sure of and for a purpose that has long lost its significance. This credentialing process in America has reached serious proportions and has in many ways complicated the legitimate aims and purposes for which our colleges and universities were established. In other words, "learning how to learn" requires serious effort, diligence of purpose and persistence. It is best offered therefore to individuals who are prepared to make such sacrifices and should not be undertaken by those who are not until they are ready.

The Future: (What objectives are Realistic?)

And now comes the toughest question of all. What will the future require of us? What can one small university do that matters in a society blurred by bigness and marching toward mass education? What can it accomplish that will really make a difference?

I believe that with proper regard for the organizational and administrative aspects of institutional behavior, human beings can structure themselves so as to avoid becoming retrospective, defensive, complacent and self-defeating. Special attention must be given to these problems at older and more venerable institutions and Willamette University fits this category at 128 years of age. We must therefore be more diligent than most other colleges and universities in our striving to prevent institutional hardening of the arteries.

At Willamette, the decade of the '70's will require:

1. Application of a self-renewing educational model

We must in a sense resist the pressures to continue to perpetuate the information-transmitting model which is typical of our entire educational system. No longer can we rely completely on a procedure which depends upon the memorization of facts and the repetition of details. "The self-renewing model," as John Gardner puts it, "has as its ultimate goal shifting to the individual the burden of pursuing his own education." To do this will require individuals who are more concerned with problem-seeking and problem-solving than security. Again in Gardner's words: "We have plenty of debaters, plenty of blamers, plenty of provocateurs, plenty of people who treat public affairs as an opportunity for personal catharsis or glorification. We don't have plenty of problem-solvers."

2. Giant steps in improving the teaching-learning process

The concept of the teacher as a scholar-counselor must be paramount in all of higher education in the '70s but it is absolutely essential in a small university like Willamette. We must take as our purpose the unlocking of unused human potential. To be effective, in my opinion, we must follow two simple rules:

- (a) Give in to goodness — take more time to try to understand others' viewpoints.
- (b) Be enthusiastic — when we can no longer muster enthusiasm for our work, we must give way to someone who can.

COMMENCEMENT speaker Dr. Robert K. Burns and President Fritz reflect the mood of the moment . . . a happy finish to a smoothly run ceremony.

3. Better and more objective institutional planning

We are all plagued by what one author has called "future shock." There few inherent dangers in formalized planning and many potential benefits. As we do so, however, we must remember that planning must engage the participation of all groups sharing a stake in the responsibility for the institution. At Willamette we will spend the next year creating a working document — a blueprint for the future. It will provide an inventory of our needs and objectives to make possible well-founded decisions on institutional priorities and a rational program for their achievement. Involved in this planning will be faculty, administrators, and students. Their recommendations will be submitted periodically to a special committee of the Board of Trustees on Planning and Facilities. Yet even before we begin, we must recognize that these plans will never be cast in concrete. They will always, in fact, be in the process of change.

4. A new commitment to shared responsibility

We have entered an era when the mission of an institution like Willamette must have a special meaning for everyone who is associated with it. When this happens, there is little that cannot be done. Without it we place a lid on our own future. I believe in student and faculty participation in the determination of the future course of this University, not as a matter of right or privilege, but as a matter of need. To provide the type of leadership in higher education of which this University is potentially capable will require the best that is in all of us.

5. Better measures of the results of our educational efforts

Unfortunately, we cannot presume that our plans, once agreed upon, will be implemented automatically. Bringing forth action from investigation and discussion is not guaranteed even where intentions are completely admirable. We must therefore chart our course on an annual basis so that we set forth our highest priorities of need and are able to report on our progress openly, honestly, and objectively. To be sure, it will be uncomfortable for some but it will be good for us all in our most honest moments. I think we must agree that measurement of change not only in our institutions but in ourselves is an important end result of what we have called education.

And who will make these things happen, you ask? In a way, everyone here will have a part and certainly everyone here whose life has been changed by this University not only can but should take a part. For them these changes and improvements will require the best they can give. They will in fact demand the best and discourage all who are not willing to give it. We must therefore be careful in our evaluations lest we inadvertently involve students, faculty, administrators or trustees who are not yet ready to make this commitment.

For me, this inaugural event is more than a ceremony to observe the formal beginning of a new administration at Willamette. It is a time for renewed commitment to what I interpret to be the purpose for this type of institution in a world changing at an often dizzying pace. It is a time for recommitment to well-planned growth not only in terms of physical resources but more importantly in human development. It is a time to set our sights on new goals and commit ourselves to carefully measured progress. It is a time to work harder for our mutual success. It is a time to expect more of ourselves and each other.

I am looking forward to it not only because of the advancement which such an outlook is bound to bring for Willamette but also because of the personal satisfactions which it will bring to each of us who is deeply involved.

ONCE AGAIN, the Willamette Alumnus serves as the vehicle for a thoughtfully prepared insert published by Editorial Projects for Education, an organization informally associated with the American Alumni Council. Certainly between now and 1980, Willamette University must face some perplexing issues. Keenly aware of these national problems, the University has taken important steps to assure the positive establishment of institutional direction at Willamette through the formulation and implementation of a University Planning System. Basically, the planning system will: (1) clearly state and evaluate what the University and each of its components or departments are trying to achieve; (2) keep these statements updated; (3) provide a basis for resource allocation; (4) evaluate progress toward stated objectives. With the help of skilled consultants, the deep involvement of Trustees, the active participation of faculty and students, and the guidance of competent administrators, a blueprint of well-planned growth and carefully measured progress will emerge. Alumni, parents and friends of the University will be asked to play important roles in the attainment of the articulated objectives. Stimulating this growth and meeting these opportunities will be challenging and rewarding for all those directly involved. As a result of this effort, it is expected that Willamette in 1980 will be an even better university than it is today, capable of facing the applicable perplexing issues detailed in the following report.

In the decade between now and then, our colleges and universities must face some large and perplexing issues

---

NINETEEN EIGHTY! A few months ago the date had a comforting remoteness about it. It was detached from today's reality; too distant to worry about. But now, with the advent of a new decade, 1980 suddenly has become the next milepost to strive for. Suddenly, for the nation's colleges and universities and those who care about them, 1980 is not so far away after all.

Campus disruptions:
a burning issue
for the Seventies

Last year's record	Had disrup- tive protests	Had violent protests
Public universities .....	43.0%	13.1%
Private universities .....	70.5%	34.4%
Public 4-yr colleges .....	21.7%	8.0%
Private nonsectarian 4-yr colleges .....	42.6%	7.3%
Protestant 4-yr colleges .....	17.8%	1.7%
Catholic 4-yr colleges .....	8.5%	2.6%
Private 2-yr colleges .....	0.0%	0.0%
Public 2-yr colleges .....	10.4%	4.5%

1980! BETWEEN NOW AND THEN, our colleges and universities will have more changes to make, more major issues to confront, more problems to solve, more demands to meet, than in any comparable period in their history. In 1980 they also will have:

- ▶ More students to serve—an estimated 11.5-million, compared to some 7.5-million today.
- ▶ More professional staff members to employ—a projected 1.1-million, compared to 785,000 today.
- ▶ Bigger budgets to meet—an estimated $39-billion in uninflated, 1968-69 dollars, nearly double the number of today.
- ▶ Larger salaries to pay—$16,532 in 1968-69 dollars for the average full-time faculty member, compared to $11,595 last year.
- ▶ More library books to buy—half a billion dollars' worth, compared to $200-million last year.
- ▶ New programs that are not yet even in existence—with an annual cost of $4.7-billion.

Those are careful, well-founded projections, prepared by one of the leading economists of higher education, Howard R. Bowen. Yet they are only one indication of what is becoming more and more evident in every respect, as our colleges and universities look to 1980:

No decade in the history of higher education—not even the eventful one just ended, with its meteoric record of growth—has come close to what the Seventies are shaping up to be.

1980! BEFORE THEY CAN GET THERE, the colleges and universities will be put to a severe test of their resiliency, resourcefulness, and strength.

No newspaper reader or television viewer needs to be told why. Many colleges and universities enter the Seventies with a burdensome inheritance: a legacy of dissatisfaction, unrest, and disorder on their campuses that has no historical parallel. It will be one of the great issues of the new decade.

Last academic year alone, the American Council on Education found that 524 of the country's 2,342 institutions of higher education experienced disruptive campus protests. The consequences ranged from the occupation of buildings at 275 institutions to the death of one or more persons at eight institutions. In the first eight months of 1969, an insurance-industry clearinghouse reported, campus disruptions caused $8.9-million in property damage.

Some types of colleges and universities were harder-hit than others—but no type except private two-year colleges escaped completely. (See the table at left for the American Council on Education's breakdown of disruptive and violent protests, according to the kinds of institution that underwent them.)

Harold Hodgkinson, of the Center for Research and Development in Higher Education at the University of California, studied more than 1,200 campuses and found another significant fact: the bigger an institution's enrollment, the greater the likelihood that disruptions took place. For instance:

- ▶ Of 501 institutions with fewer than 1,000 students, only 14 per cent reported that the level of protest had increased on their campuses over the past 10 years.

► Of 32 institutions enrolling between 15,000 and 25,000 students, 75 per cent reported an increase in protests.

► Of 9 institutions with more than 25,000 students, all but one reported that protests had increased.

This relationship between enrollments and protests, Mr. Hodgkinson discovered, held true in both the public and the private colleges and universities:

"The public institutions which report an increase in protest have a mean size of almost triple the public institutions that report no change in protest," he found. "The nonsectarian institutions that report increased protest are more than twice the size of the nonsectarian institutions that report no change in protest."

Another key finding: among the faculties at protest-prone institutions, these characteristics were common: "interest in research, lack of interest in teaching, lack of loyalty to the institution, and support of dissident students."

Nor—contrary to popular opinion—were protests confined to one or two parts of the country (imagined by many to be the East and West Coasts). Mr. Hodgkinson found no region in which fewer than 19 per cent of all college and university campuses had been hit by protests.

"It is very clear from our data," he reported, "that, although some areas have had more student protest than others, there is no 'safe' region of the country."

No campus in any region is really 'safe' from protest

1980!

WHAT WILL BE THE PICTURE by the end of the decade? Will campus disruptions continue—and perhaps spread—throughout the Seventies? No questions facing the colleges and universities today are more critical, or more difficult to answer with certainty.

Some ominous reports from the high schools

On the dark side are reports from hundreds of high schools to the effect that “the colleges have seen nothing, yet.” The National Association of Secondary School Principals, in a random survey, found that 59 per cent of 1,026 senior and junior high schools had experienced some form of student protest last year. A U.S. Office of Education official termed the high school disorders “usually more precipitous, spontaneous, and riotlike" than those in the colleges. What such rumblings may presage for the colleges and universities to which many of the high school students are bound, one can only speculate.

Even so, on many campuses, there is a guarded optimism. "I know I may have to eat these words tomorrow," said a university official who had served with the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence, "but I think we may have turned the corner." Others echo his sentiments.

"If anything," said a dean who almost superstitiously asked that he not be identified by name, "the campuses may be meeting their difficulties with greater success than is society generally—despite the scare headlines.

"The student dissatisfactions are being dealt with, constructively, on many fronts. The unrest appears to be producing less violence and more reasoned searches for remedies—although I still cross my fingers when saying so."

Some observers see another reason for believing that the more destructive forms of student protest may be on the wane. Large numbers of students, including many campus activists, appear to have been alienated this year by the violent tactics of extreme radicals. And deep divisions have occurred in Students for a Democratic Society, the radical organization that was involved in many earlier campus disruptions.

In 1968, the radicals gained many supporters among moderate students as a result of police methods in breaking up some of their demonstrations. This year, the opposite has occurred. Last fall, for example, the extremely radical "Weatherman" faction of Students for a Democratic Society deliberately set out to provoke a violent police reaction in Chicago by smashing windows and attacking bystanders. To the Weathermen's disappointment, the police were so restrained that they won the praise of many of their former critics—and not only large numbers of moderate students, but even a number of campus SDS chapters, said they had been "turned off" by the extremists' violence.

The president of the University of Michigan, Robben Fleming, is among those who see a lessening of student enthusiasm for the extreme-radical approach. "I believe the violence and force will soon pass, because it has so little support within the student body," he told an interviewer. "There is very little student support for violence of any kind, even when it's directed at the university."

At Harvard University, scene of angry student protests a year ago, a visitor found a similar outlook. "Students seem to be moving away from a diffuse discontent and toward a rediscovery of the values of workmanship," said the master of Eliot House, Alan E. Heimert. "It's as if they were saying, 'The revolution isn't right around the corner, so I'd better find my vocation and develop myself.'"

Bruce Chalmers, master of Winthrop House, saw "a kind of anti-toxin in students' blood" resulting from the 1969 disorders: "The disruptiveness, emotional intensity, and loss of time and opportunity last year," he said, "have convinced people that, whatever happens, we must avoid replaying that scenario."

A student found even more measurable evidence of the new mood: "At Lamont Library last week I had to wait 45 minutes to get a reserve book. Last spring, during final exams, there was no wait at all."

Despite the scare headlines, a mood of cautious optimism

Many colleges have learned a lot from the disruptions

The need now: to work on reform, calmly, reasonably

1980! PARTIALLY UNDERLYING THE CAUTIOUS OPTIMISM is a feeling that many colleges and universities—which, having been peaceful places for decades, were unprepared and vulnerable when the first disruptions struck—have learned a lot in a short time.

When they returned to many campuses last fall, students were greeted with what The Chronicle of Higher Education called “a combination of stern warnings against disruptions and conciliatory moves aimed at giving students a greater role in campus governance.”

Codes of discipline had been revised, and special efforts had been made to acquaint students with them. Security forces had been strengthened. Many institutions made it clear that they were willing to seek court injunctions and would call the police if necessary to keep the peace.

Equally important, growing numbers of institutions were recognizing that, behind the stridencies of protest, many student grievances were indeed legitimate. The institutions demonstrated (not merely talked about) a new readiness to introduce reforms. While, in the early days of campus disruptions, some colleges and universities made ad hoc concessions to demonstrators under the threat and reality of violence, more and more now began to take the initiative of reform, themselves.

The chancellor of the State University of New York, Samuel B. Gould, described the challenge:

“America’s institutions of higher learning . . . must do more than make piecemeal concessions to change. They must do more than merely defend themselves.

“They must take the initiative, take it in such a way that there is never a doubt as to what they intend to achieve and how all the components of the institutions will be involved in achieving it. They must call together their keenest minds and their most humane souls to sit and probe and question and plan and discard and replan—until a new concept of the university emerges, one which will fit today’s needs but will have its major thrust toward tomorrow’s.”

1980! IF THEY ARE TO ARRIVE AT THAT DATE in improved condition, however, more and more colleges and universities—and their constituencies—seem to be saying they must work out their reforms in an atmosphere of calm and reason.

Cornell University’s vice-president for public affairs, Steven Muller (“My temperament has always been more activist than scholarly”), put it thus before the American Political Science Association:

“The introduction of force into the university violates the very essence of academic freedom, which in its broadest sense is the freedom to inquire, and openly to proclaim and test conclusions resulting from inquiry. . . .

“It should be possible within the university to gain attention and to make almost any point and to persuade others by the use of reason. Even if this is not always true, it is possible to accomplish these ends by nonviolent and by noncoercive means.

“Those who choose to employ violence or coercion within the university cannot long remain there without destroying the whole fabric of the academic environment. Most of those who today believe otherwise are, in fact, pitiable victims of the very degradation of values they are attempting to combat."

Chancellor Gould has observed:

"Among all social institutions today, the university allows more dissent, takes freedom of mind and spirit more seriously, and, under considerable sufferance, labors to create a more ideal environment for free expression and for the free interchange of ideas and emotions than any other institution in the land. . . ."

"But when dissent evolves into disruption, the university, also by its very nature, finds itself unable to cope . . . without clouding the real issues beyond hope of rational resolution. . . ."

The president of the University of Minnesota, Malcolm Moos, said not long ago:

"The ills of our campuses and our society are too numerous, too serious, and too fateful to cause anyone to believe that serenity is the proper mark of an effective university or an effective intellectual community. Even in calmer times any public college or university worthy of the name has housed relatively vocal individuals and groups of widely diverging political persuasions. . . . The society which tries to get its children taught by fettered and fearful minds is trying not only to destroy its institutions of higher learning, but also to destroy itself. . . ."

"[But] . . . violation of the rights or property of other citizens, on or off the campus, is plainly wrong. And it is plainly wrong no matter how high-minded the alleged motivation for such activity. Beyond that, those who claim the right to interfere with the speech, or movement, or safety, or instruction, or property of others on a campus—and claim that right because their hearts are pure or their grievance great—destroy the climate of civility and freedom without which the university simply cannot function as an educating institution."

Can dissent exist in a climate of freedom and civility?

What part should students have in running a college?

1980! THAT "CLIMATE OF CIVILITY AND FREEDOM" appears to be necessary before the colleges and universities can come to grips, successfully, with many of the other major issues that will confront them in the decade.

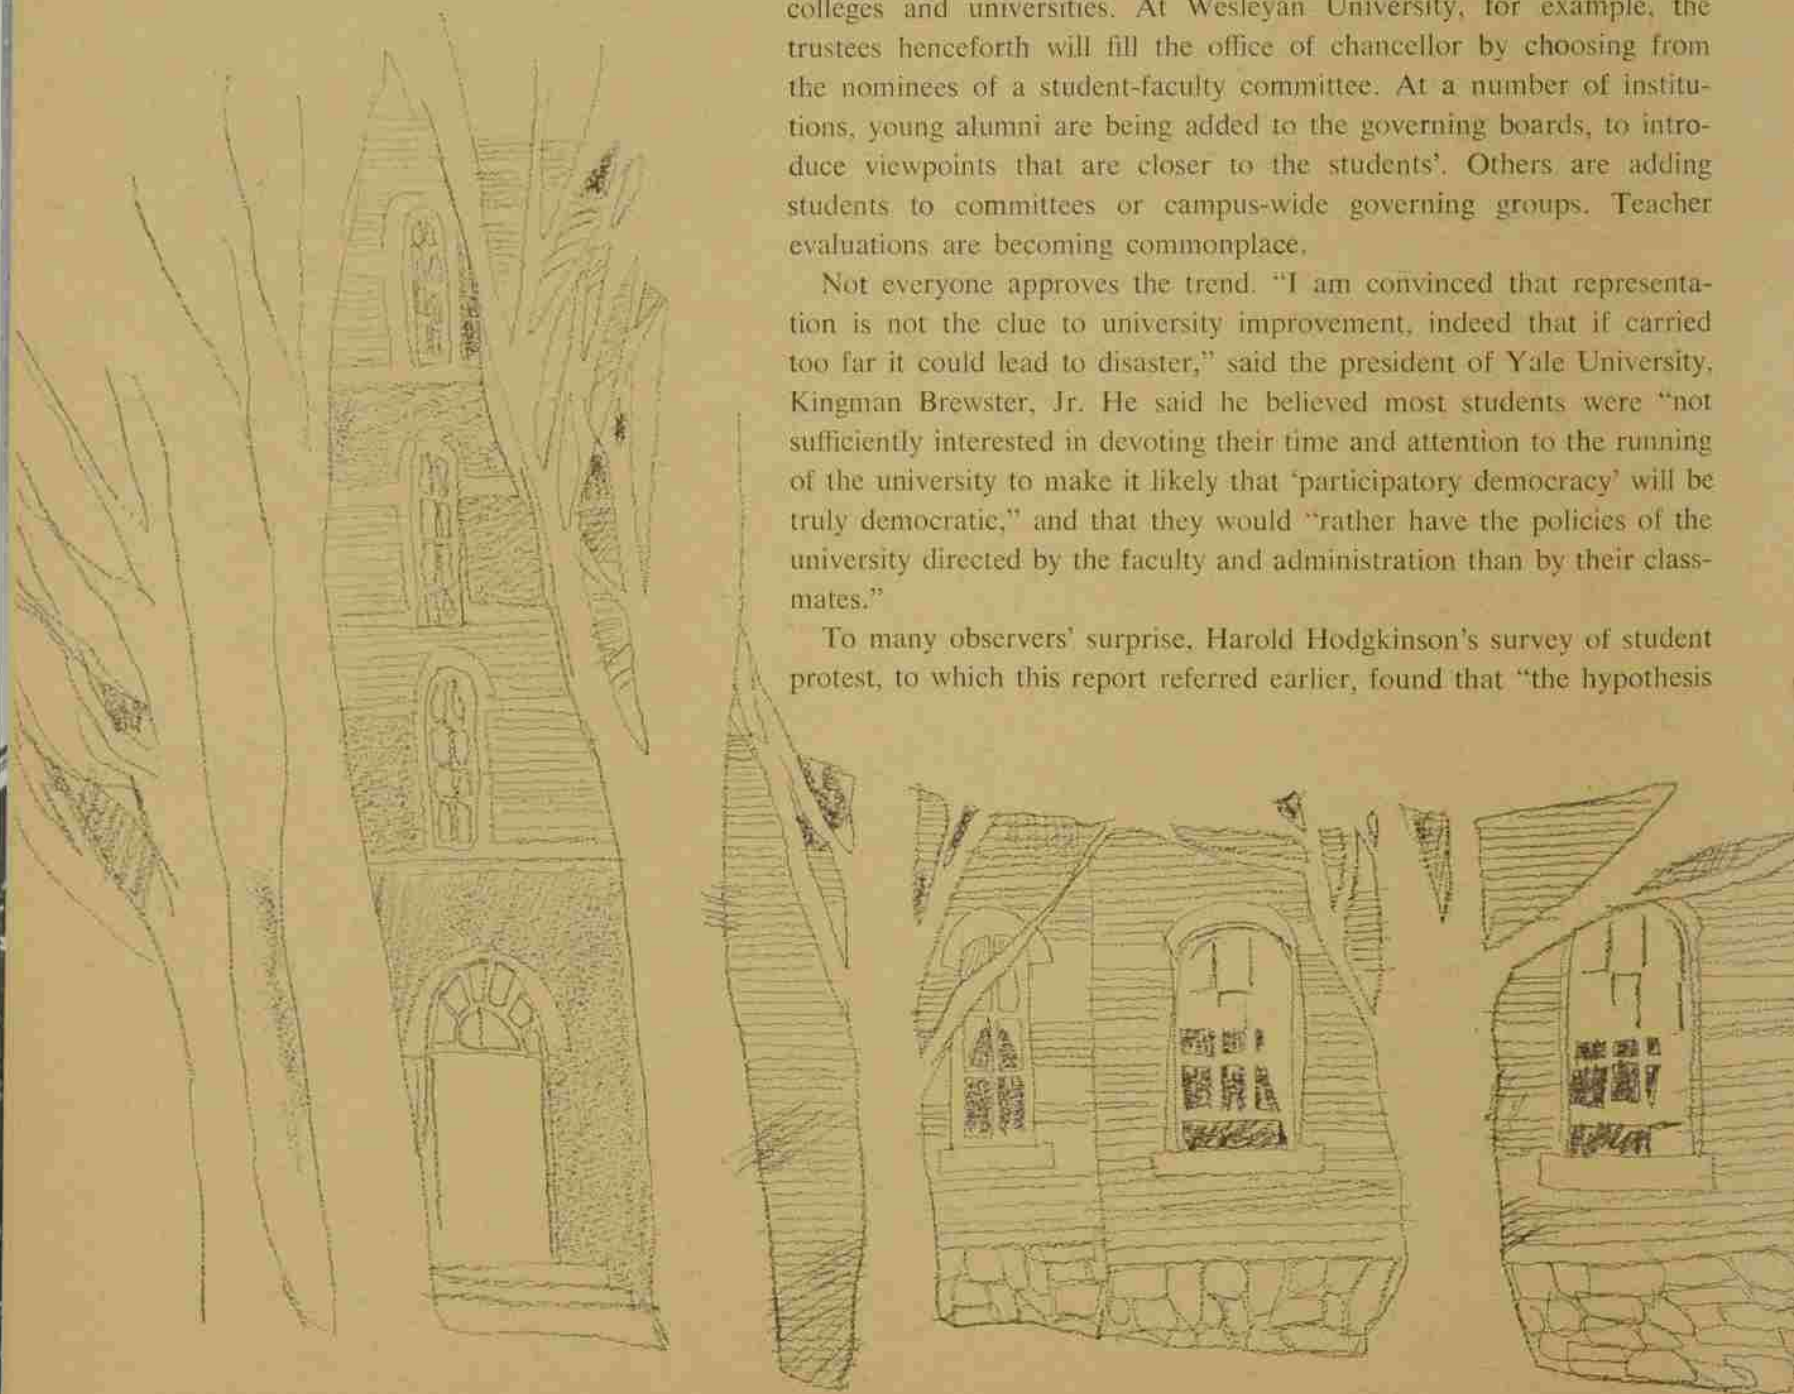

Those issues are large and complex. They touch all parts of the college and university community—faculty, students, administrators, board members, and alumni—and they frequently involve large segments of the public, as well. Many are controversial; some are potentially explosive. Here is a sampling:

► What is the students' rightful role in the running of a college or university? Should they be represented on the institution's governing board? On faculty and administrative committees? Should their evaluations of a teacher's performance in the classroom play a part in the advancement of his career?

Trend: Although it is just getting under way, there's a definite movement toward giving students a greater voice in the affairs of many colleges and universities. At Wesleyan University, for example, the trustees henceforth will fill the office of chancellor by choosing from the nominees of a student-faculty committee. At a number of institutions, young alumni are being added to the governing boards, to introduce viewpoints that are closer to the students'. Others are adding students to committees or campus-wide governing groups. Teacher evaluations are becoming commonplace.

Not everyone approves the trend. "I am convinced that representation is not the clue to university improvement, indeed that if carried too far it could lead to disaster," said the president of Yale University, Kingman Brewster, Jr. He said he believed most students were "not sufficiently interested in devoting their time and attention to the running of the university to make it likely that 'participatory democracy' will be truly democratic," and that they would "rather have the policies of the university directed by the faculty and administration than by their classmates."

To many observers' surprise, Harold Hodgkinson's survey of student protest, to which this report referred earlier, found that "the hypothesis that increased student control in institutional policy-making would result in a decrease in student protest is not supported by our data at all. The reverse would seem to be more likely." Some 80 per cent of the 355 institutions where protests had increased over the past 10 years reported that the students' policy-making role had increased, too.

► How can the advantages of higher education be extended to greater numbers of minority-group youths? What if the quality of their pre-college preparation makes it difficult, if not impossible, for many of them to meet the usual entrance requirements? Should colleges modify those requirements and offer remedial courses? Or should they maintain their standards, even if they bar the door to large numbers of disadvantaged persons?

Trend: A statement adopted this academic year by the National Association of College Admissions Counselors may contain some clues. At least 10 per cent of a college's student body, it said, should be composed of minority students. At least half of those should be "high-risk" students who, by normal academic criteria, would not be expected to succeed in college. "Each college should eliminate the use of aptitude test scores as a major factor in determining eligibility for admission for minority students," the admissions counselors' statement said.

A great increase in the part played by community and junior colleges is also likely. The Joint Economic Committee of Congress was recently given this projection by Ralph W. Tyler, director emeritus of the Center for Advanced Study in Behavioral Sciences at Stanford, Cal.: "[Two-year colleges] now enroll more than 20 per cent of all students in post-high school institutions, and at the rate these colleges are increasing in number as well as in enrollment, it is safe to predict that 10 years from now 3-million students will be enrolled . . . representing one-third of the total post-high school enrollment and approximately one-half of all first- and second-year students.

"Their importance is due to several factors. They are generally open-door colleges, enrolling nearly all high school graduates or adults who apply. Because the students represent a very wide range of background and previous educational experience, the faculty generally recognizes the need for students to be helped to learn."

What about the enrollment of youths from minority groups?

Negro institutions:
what's their future
in higher education?

► What is the future of the predominantly Negro institutions of higher education?

Trend: Shortly after the current academic year began, the presidents of 111 predominantly Negro colleges—"a strategic national resource . . . more important to the national security than those producing the technology for nuclear warfare," said Herman H. Long, president of Talladega College—formed a new organization to advance their institutions' cause. The move was born of a feeling that the colleges were orphans in U.S. higher education, carrying a heavy responsibility for educating Negro students yet receiving less than their fair share of federal funds, state appropriations, and private gifts; losing some of their best faculty members to traditionally white institutions in the rush to establish "black studies" programs; and suffering stiff competition from the white colleges in the recruitment of top Negro high school graduates.

► How can colleges and universities, other than those with predominantly black enrollments, best meet the needs and demands of non-white students? Should they establish special courses, such as black studies? Hire more nonwhite counselors, faculty members, administrators? Accede to some Negroes' demands for separate dormitory facilities, student unions, and dining-hall menus?

Trend: "The black studies question, like the black revolt as a whole, has raised all the fundamental problems of class power in American life, and the solutions will have to run deep into the structure of the institutions themselves," says a noted scholar in Negro history, Eugene D. Genovese, chairman of the history department at the University of Rochester.

Three schools of thought on black studies now can be discerned in American higher education. One, which includes many older-generation Negro educators, holds black studies courses in contempt. Another, at the opposite extreme, believes that colleges and universities must go to great lengths to atone for past injustices to Negroes. The third, between the first two groups, feels that "some forms of black studies are legitimate intellectual pursuits," in the words of one close observer, "but that generally any such program must fit the university's traditional patterns." The last group, most scholars now believe, is likely to prevail in the coming decade.

As for separatist movements on the campuses, most have run into provisions of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964, which bars discrimination in housing and eating facilities.

► What should be the role of the faculty in governing an institution of higher education? When no crisis is present, do most faculty members really want an active part in governance? Or, except for supervising the academic program, do they prefer to concentrate on their own teaching and research?

Trend: In recent years, observers have noted that many faculty members were more interested in their disciplines—history or physics or medicine—than in the institutions they happened to be working for at the time. This seemed not unnatural, since more and more faculty members were moving from campus to campus and thus had less opportunity than their predecessors to develop a strong loyalty to one institution.

But it often meant that the general, day-to-day running of a college or university was left to administrative staff members, with faculty members devoting themselves to their scholarly subject-matter.

Campus disorders appear to have arrested this trend at some colleges and universities, at least temporarily. Many faculty members—alarmed at the disruptions of classes or feeling closer to the students' cause than to administrators and law officers—rekindled their interest in the institutions' affairs. At other institutions, however, as administrators and trustees responded to student demands by pressing for academic reforms, at least some faculty members have resisted changing their ways. Said the president of the University of Massachusetts, John W. Lederle, not long ago: "Students are beginning to discover that it is not the administration that is the enemy, but sometimes it is the faculty that drags its feet." Robert Taylor, vice-president of the University of Wisconsin, was more optimistic: student pressures for academic reforms, he said, might "bring the professors back not only to teaching but to commitment to the institution."

The faculty:
what is its role
in campus governance?

Can the quality of teaching
be improved?

► How can the quality of college teaching be improved? In a system in which the top academic degree, the Ph.D., is based largely on a man's or woman's research, must teaching abilities be neglected? In universities that place a strong emphasis on research, how can students be assured of a fair share of the faculty members' interest and attention in the classroom?

Trend: The coming decade is likely to see an intensified search for an answer to the teaching-"versus"-research dilemma. "Typical Ph.D. training is simply not appropriate to the task of undergraduate teaching and, in particular, to lower-division teaching in most colleges in this country," said E. Alden Dunham of the Carnegie Corporation, in a recent book. He recommended a new "teaching degree," putting "a direct focus upon undergraduate education."

Similar proposals are being heard in many quarters. "The spectacular growth of two- and four-year colleges has created the need for teachers who combine professional competence with teaching interests, but who neither desire nor are required to pursue research as a condition of their employment," said Herbert Weisinger, graduate dean at the State University of New York at Stony Brook. He proposed a two-track program for Ph.D. candidates: the traditional one for those aiming to teach at the graduate level, and a new track for students who want to teach undergraduates. The latter would teach for two years in community or four-year colleges in place of writing a research dissertation.

► What changes should be made in college and university curricula? To place more emphasis on true learning and less on the attainment of grades, should "Pass" and "Fail" replace the customary grades of A, B, C, D, and F?

Trend: Here, in the academic heart of the colleges and universities, some of the most exciting developments of the coming decade appear certain to take place. "From every quarter," said Michael Brick and Earl J. McGrath in a recent study for the Institute of Higher Education at Teachers College of Columbia University, "evidence is suggesting that the 1970's will see vastly different colleges and universities from those of the 1960's." Interdisciplinary studies, honors programs, independent study, undergraduate work abroad, community service projects, work-study programs, and non-Western studies were some of the innovations being planned or under way at hundreds of institutions.

Grading practices are being re-examined on many campuses. So are new approaches to instruction, such as television, teaching machines, language laboratories, comprehensive examinations. New styles in classrooms and libraries are being tried out; students are evaluating faculty members' teaching performance and participating on faculty committees at more than 600 colleges, and plans for such activity are being made at several-score others.

By 1980, the changes should be vast, indeed.

1980! BETWEEN NOW AND THE BEGINNING of the next decade, one great issue may underlie all the others—and all the others may become a part of it. When flatly stated, this issue sounds innocuous; yet its implications are so great that they can divide faculties, stir students, and raise profound philosophical and practical questions among presidents, trustees, alumni, and legislators:

► What shall be the nature of a college or university in our society?

Until recently, almost by definition, a college or university was accepted as a neutral in the world's political and ideological arenas; as dispassionate in a world of passions; as having what one observer called "the unique capacity to walk the razor's edge of being both in and out of the world, and yet simultaneously in a unique relationship with it."

The college or university was expected to revere knowledge, wherever knowledge led. Even though its research and study might provide the means to develop more destructive weapons of war (as well as life-saving medicines, life-sustaining farming techniques, and life-enhancing intellectual insights), it pursued learning for learning's sake and rarely questioned, or was questioned about, the validity of that process.

The college or university was dedicated to the proposition that there were more than one side to every controversy, and that it would explore them all. The proponents of all sides had a hearing in the academic world's scheme of things, yet the college or university, sheltering and protecting them all, itself would take no stand.

Today the concept that an institution of higher education should be neutral in political and social controversies—regardless of its scholars' personal beliefs—is being challenged both on and off the campuses.

Those who say the colleges and universities should be "politicized" argue that neutrality is undesirable, immoral—and impossible. They say the academic community must be responsible, as Carl E. Schorske, professor of history at the University of California at Berkeley, wrote in Publications of the Modern Language Association, for the "implications of its findings for society and mankind." "The scholar's zeal for truth without consequences," said Professor Schorske, has no place on the campus today.

Julian Bond, a Negro member of the Georgia state senate, argued

will tower above
all others

the point thus, before the annual meeting of the American Council on Education:

"Man still makes war. He still insists that one group subordinate its wishes and desires to that of another. He still insists on gathering material wealth at the expense of his fellows and his environment. Men and nations have grown arrogant, and the struggle of the Twentieth Century has continued.

"And while the struggle has continued, the university has remained aloof, a center for the study of why man behaves as he does, but never a center for the study of how to make man behave in a civilized manner. . . .

"Until the university develops a politics or—in better terms, perhaps, for this gathering—a curriculum and a discipline that stifles war and poverty and racism, until then, the university will be in doubt."

Needless to say, many persons disagree that the college or university should be politicized. The University of Minnesota's President Malcolm Moos stated their case not long ago:

"More difficult than the activism of violence is the activism that seeks to convert universities, as institutions, into political partisans thumping for this or that ideological position. Yet the threat of this form of activism is equally great, in that it carries with it a threat to the unique relationship between the university and external social and political institutions.

"Specifically, universities are uniquely the place where society builds its capacity to gather, organize, and transmit knowledge; to analyze and clarify controverted issues; and to define alternative responses to issues. Ideology is properly an object of study or scholarship. But when it becomes the starting-point of intellect, it threatens the function uniquely cherished by institutions of learning.

". . . It is still possible for members of the university community—its faculty, its students, and its administrators—to participate fully and freely as individuals or in social groups with particular political or ideological purposes. The entire concept of academic freedom, as developed on our campuses, presupposes a role for the teacher as teacher, and the scholar as scholar, and the university as a place of teaching and learning which can flourish free from external political or ideological constraints.

". . . Every scholar who is also an active and perhaps passionate citizen . . . knows the pitfalls of ideology, fervor, and a priori truths as the starting-point of inquiry. He knows the need to beware of his own biases in his relations with students, and his need to protect their autonomy of choice as rigorously as he would protect his own. . . .

"Like the individual scholar, the university itself is no longer the dispassionate seeker after truth once it adopts controverted causes which go beyond the duties of scholarship, teaching, and learning. But unlike the individual scholar, the university has no colleague to light the fires of debate on controverted public issues. And unlike the individual scholar, it cannot assert simply a personal choice or judgment when it enters the field of political partisanship, but must seem to assert a corporate judgment which obligates, or impinges upon, or towers over what might be contrary choices by individuals within its community.

Should colleges and universities take ideological stands?

"To this extent, it loses its unique identity among our social institutions. And to this extent it diminishes its capacity to protect the climate of freedom which nourishes the efficiency of freedom."

1980! WHAT WILL THE COLLEGE OR UNIVERSITY be like, if it survives this tumultuous decade? If it comes to grips with the formidable array of issues that confront it? If it makes the painful decisions that meeting those issues will require?

Along the way, how many of its alumni and alumnae will give it the understanding and support it must have if it is to survive? Even if they do not always agree in detail with its decisions, will they grant it the strength of their belief in its mission and its conscience?

Help Us Find Lost Alumni

Keeping tab on alumni (all former students) of Willamette is a real challenge for the Alumni Office. Living alumni now number nearly 10,500 and the list goes up about 250 each year. At the risk of looking like we want more work, we would like to service over 700 more alumni who are known only in our files as "lost." If you know the whereabouts of any of the alums listed under the "Lost" headings on the following pages, please drop a card to Roger Kirchner, Director of Alumni Relations, Willamette University, Salem, Oregon 97301 with the name and address. We'll follow up and share any news we get on the "lost" alumni in subsequent class notes sections. This issue's section, by the way, is the largest ever with notes on over 600 alumni.

CHRONICLES OF WILLAMETTE, Volume II

“This volume should attract alumni and friends of Willamette”

Late this fall, volume two of the Chronicles of Willamette is due off the press. Written by Dean Emeritus Robert Gregg, the volume covers the years of President G. Herbert Smith, 1942-69. Alumni and friends may reserve a copy for $5 by writing to the Alumni Office, Willamette University, Salem, Oregon 97301.

Dean Emeritus Robert Gregg

Dr. Robert M. Gatke's monumental work, The Chronicles of Willamette, appeared in the Centennial Year of 1942 and provided the reader with a comprehensive, authoritative history of the birth and growth of this pioneer institution of the Northwest. Upon his retirement he was commissioned to add a second volume, and he was engrossed in this labor of love and dedication when death suddenly struck.

Surely Dean Robert D. Gregg would have been Dr. Gatke's choice to carry on, both from professional qualifications and from a long standing friendship. Over many a cup of coffee the two had conferred on the content and progress of Volume II — almost as if the one were predestined to assume the task of the other.

Dean Gregg joined Willamette in 1948 following 13 years as head of the history department of Carnegie Institute of Technology (now Carnegie-Mellon University). In Pittsburgh he spoke frequently on foreign relations, was for four years chairman of the Foreign Policy Association of Pittsburgh, and was co-director of the Pittsburgh Branch of the Office of Inter-American Affairs in Washington, D.C. A Phi Beta Kappa, with successive degrees from Oberlin, Michigan, and Johns Hopkins, he brought to Willamette an educational experience of the highest quality.

Dean Gregg writes the Chronicles of Willamette, Volume II — Those Eventful Years of the President Smith Era with the same degree of authority as Dr. Gatke wrote Volume I, for the Dean was in the very midst of the greater part of the Smith Administration. He was a close friend of President Smith, and shared the confidence of administration, faculty, and students. Volume II covers the 27 years of President Smith's administration from the critical period of World War II to the increasing involvement of students in the late 60's. The first chapter is a condensation of a first draft by Dr. Gatke of about twice the length. The remaining chapters are Dean Gregg's. The book is carefully documented for historical accuracy, but throughout, the Dean reveals himself in his evaluations, his appraisals, his prognosis, his sense of humor, and last but not least, his love for the institution, the people in particular, that he served so long. This volume should attract not only alumni and friends of Willamette but also anyone interested in the story of a very typical American institution — the small college.
