Alumni support offers good, bad news

Remember the good news/bad news jokes? They were the rage for several years during the 1970s perhaps because so much of life seemed to have a bittersweet quality to it. I remember the "New Yorker" cartoon where the successful businessman is explaining that the good news is that because of his Protestant work ethic, he has accumulated a fortune and the bad news is that because of his puritanical guilt complex, he cannot enjoy any of it.

Well, the report from Willamette is of the good news/bad news variety. I have just reviewed the summary from the Development Office regarding alumni support of Willamette. First the good news. We have many reasons to rejoice and be thankful. The total alumni giving for the 1981-82 fiscal year which ended May 31 was up 89 percent over the previous year. We received $593,587 compared to $313,862 the previous year. This was not due to just one large gift. Actually, there were 507 new contributors and 519 who increased the size of their contribution over their gifts the previous year.

While we have expressed appreciation individually to each donor, I want you all to know how grateful we are for your support and partnership in meeting the financial challenge to make Willamette an even greater institution. Through your help we are able to announce that last year's operating budget was balanced and that quality was not compromised to achieve this objective. Additionally, the Capital Campaign is off to a good start as many of you have responded to the challenge to improve our facilities. The average alumni gift last year was $293.42. If you gave less than that, we hope you will try to stretch a bit when you consider your 1982-83 gift, especially if it represents your gift to both the Alumni Annual Fund and the Capital Campaign. In any case, you can see why there is good news and cause for rejoicing.

And now the bad news. We apparently did a poor job in presenting the case for Willamette because less than one out of five alumni made a gift of any kind last year to Willamette. Specifically, of the 11,648 alumni who were asked to support the University, 2,023 made a contribution, just over 17 percent. This is a significantly lower percentage than most other independent college alumni across the nation.

I am confident that in the year ahead the pattern will change. Our enrollment and academic programs are strong, our plans for the future sound. The perception of the importance of the Campaign to Willamette's future should generate increased enthusiasm. With Trustees and leadership donors providing united encouragement for the Campaign, I urge you to investigate and invest in Willamette.

I would like next year to report the good news—that the amount of giving and number of givers was up substantially, and then the bad news—that our appeal was so successful that we are repeating it. For in essence, an Alumni Annual Fund is just that—an annual appeal because the task is never done. We are continually educating a new generation of leaders; we are improving the worth of a Willamette diploma by improving Willamette's reputation; and we are securing the future of the institution. May I challenge you to support the Alumni Annual Fund, and if you choose not to, may I challenge you to let me know why. Tell me what we can do to make Willamette more worthy of your support. I suppose I am asking for the good news or bad news and we will try to learn from both.

ON THE COVER

Deby Barnhart and Ed Blatter survey another new issue of "Multnomah Monthly," their new Portland magazine now nearly a year old. The Willamette graduates formed the publication last fall and despite their many

"20 hour days," the two-person publishing staff has found the experience to their liking. More on Deby and Ed begins on page 7 of the Scene. The story is by Tina Richards, the photos by Jim Bortvedt.

1982 COMMENCEMENT

Willamette's 140th commencement, May 9, drew some 3,000 spectators to McCulloch Stadium for the 1982 ceremonies. The highlight of the academic year climaxed a busy weekend of activity on the campus, which began May 8 with Alumni Day. The day belonged to the graduating seniors from the College of Liberal Arts, the College of Law and the Atkinson Graduate School of Management. Some of the activity included (clockwise from top right), President Hudson presenting Ann Davis with her degree; happy grads Cliff Cotton and Katy Demory; the president leading the recessional with speaker Warne Nunn, who recently stepped down as Chairman of the Board of Trustees; a proud Dave Kuizenga of the Atkinson School; and a beaming Mary Cavanaugh of the College of Law.

CAMPUS NEWS

Elwyn Williams heads Willamette University Relations Department

Elwyn Williams is the new Vice President for University Relations at Willamette. The announcement was made by Willamette President Jerry E. Hudson on Thursday, June 3.

Williams comes to Willamette from Pacific University in Forest Grove where he has served as Vice President for University Relations since 1978. His administrative responsibilities at Pacific included Development, Alumni, Community Public Relations and Publications.

Prior to coming to Pacific Williams had served as Vice President for Development and Public Relations at Otterbein College in Westerville, OH for nine years. His 16 years of educational administrative experience also includes a three-year term as Director of Fund Development at Rockford College in Rockford, IL.

A native of New York, Williams is a United Methodist minister and has served as a staff executive on the Interboard Council of the Indiana Conference of the United Methodist Church. He is a member of Oregon-Idaho Annual Conference of the United Methodist Church.

Williams received his A.B. degree from Syracuse University in 1948 and his Master of Divinity from Boston University in 1951. He is a 1973 graduate of the Harvard Institute for Educational Management.

"We are pleased to have a man of Elwyn Williams' experience in private higher education and his knowledge of Oregon join our staff. He comes to us at an important time for the University and his prestige and background will serve us well," said Hudson.

Williams replaces Larry Large who resigned the Willamette post in April to take a similar position at Reed College in Portland. Williams will assume the duties of the Willamette vice presidency in mid-July.

The Vice President for University Relations is responsible for Development, Alumni Relations, Public Relations and Publications at Willamette.

Law team gains top national honor

Willamette University captured top honors in the National Student Trial Advocacy competition held April 24 in Washington, D.C.

Representing the Western Region, the team of Gail Alexander and Lansing Haynes placed first in the national finals which included teams from Cumberland College in Williamsburg, KY, William Mitchell College of Law of St. Paul, Minn., and Western New England College of Springfield, Mass.

The Trial Advocacy competition, sponsored by the American Trial Lawyer's Association, was held in the Federal District Court House in Washington where the four regional winners met in mock trial situations, testing skills. This year's case was a murder case.

In the semifinals, Willamette acted as defense and won; and then met William Mitchell in the finals. Willamette was the prosecution in the final round, the jury of lawyers again deciding in favor of the Alexander and Haynes team. Regular trial judges presided over the cases with lawyers making up the jury and deciding the verdict.

In all over 40 schools participated in the program on local, regional and finally, national levels. Willamette earned its berth in the finals by winning the Western Regional Competition in Salt Lake City, UT.

Alexander, from Salem, is a second-year student at the Willamette College of Law and Haynes, from Caldwell, ID, is a third-year student. The winners earned a trophy and a cash prize of $500 each.

Advisor to the Willamette program throughout the competition was Donald Turner, professor of law.

A busy summer campus saw Willamette's computers in full use thanks to two sessions offered by the Office of External Education. Summer Classes for High School Students drew impressive numbers in July and a special Summer Classes for Children drew maximum enrollment for the computer program for seventh, eighth and ninth graders in June. Successful classes were offered in computer science, creative writing and biology along with a special music camp during the high school session, while the children's classes offered study in literature, art and tennis along with the computer programming course. The classes were instructed by Willamette professors and drew participants from as far away as Connecticut, Alaska and California. DeeAnn Hall photo.

College of Law schedules seminars

Two major seminars and a special workshop will highlight an active fall schedule at the Willamette College of Law.

Kicking off the busy semester will be "Farm Estate and Business Planning," a seminar scheduled for Friday, Sept. 10 at the College of Law. Featuring Dr. Neil Harl, the country's leading expert on the subject, the seminar is designed specifically for attorneys, accountants, life underwriters and trust officers.

Later in the fall, the third annual "Trial Advocacy Seminar for Practicing Attorneys" will be held at Salishan Lodge on the Oregon coast, Dec. 11-18. Participants will gain experience in trial practice through role playing in mock trials, presided over by Oregon judges and involving professional actors and actresses appearing as witnesses.

A special workshop will be featured

Sept. 17-18 at the College of Law. The workshop will be designed to train physicians to appear in court as expert witnesses and to train lawyers to make the best use of doctors as expert witnesses. Local judges will preside over mock trials and each participating physician will appear as a witness for both the defense and the prosecution.

Additional information about any of the seminars and workshops is available by calling 370-6162.

Class of '32 announced endowed scholarship fund

A major highlight of the Alumni Banquet in May was the announcement by members of the Class of 1932 of an endowed scholarship fund in commemoration of the class' 50th anniversary of its graduation from Willamette. Cash and deferred gifts totaling well over $140,000 make up the newly-established endowed fund, the first ever endowed class fund at Willamette.

The brainchild of Lloyd Girod, newly installed President of the Alumni Association, and the result of hard work by a committee which included himself, classmates Hayes Beall, Salem, and Clarence Poor, Berkeley, Cal., and Development Office staff member Harry Manley, the endowment fund will be used to provide scholarships for future generations of Willamette students.

Currently in the endowment is $22,290 in cash and some $120,000 in wills or life income contracts or trusts. It is anticipated that members of the class will continue to add to the value of the fund as the years progress.

Girod and his committee spent nearly four years in establishing the endowment, writing a great many letters and making numerous personal contacts with classmates. In addition, they contacted other students who were at Willamette during the same time as the Class of 1932 and challenged those groups to also make significant gifts of their own for their 50th class reunion. This has resulted in several large reunion class gifts to Willamette's annual fund over the past several years.

Eaton Hall is the second phase of the Campaign for Willamette and renovation work began in mid-July on the $1.7 million project. The building, a Salem landmark, will undergo remodeling throughout the interior and will be ready for use in January when Willamette's spring semester begins. The new campus mail center and several administrative offices formerly in Eaton are now housed on the first floor of the Putnam University Center where further remodeling has taken place to accommodate the switch.

Beard, Hauk named to Oregon Athletic Hall

Willamette will be well represented in the Oregon Empire Athletic Foundation Hall of Fame it was announced in August. The Hall, which honors outstanding Oregon athletes and coaches, has added three Willamette figures to its list of inductees and a special Hall of Fame dinner in Portland will honor the inductees on Sept. 13.

Named as two of the small college inductees were Bill Beard '38 and Harold Hauk '30. Beard was an All-Conference performer in football, basketball and baseball and had a career in professional baseball, including a stint as manager of the Salem Senators. Hauk was the first Booth Award recipient at Willamette and had an outstanding career as football, basketball and baseball coach at Salem High School.

Also to be inducted is the late Roy S. "Spec" Keene, who was coach and athletic director at the University prior to World War II. He joins former Oregon track coach Bill Bowerman and Oregon State basketball coach Paul Valenti as coaches going into the Hall.

One other inductee whose name is familiar to some Willamette people is Bill Austin, who was a star football player at Oregon State in the 1940s and later was head coach of the New York Giants football team when it held its pre-season camp at Willamette in the late 1950s.

Class features Japanese Woodcut Printmaking

"Japanese Woodcut Printmaking" will be featured this fall as part of Willamette's Classes for the Community program beginning Oct. 16. The class is scheduled for six consecutive Saturday mornings running through Nov. 20.

Class sessions are from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. each morning and will offer instruction in the use of carving tools with each student cutting a simple woodblock.

Cost for the course is $60 ($35 for senior citizens) and registration and additional information is available by contacting the Office of External Education (370-6162).

Alumni Update Series slated

The Alumni Update Series of the Willamette College of Law has scheduled four meetings for the fall of 1982.

Meetings are scheduled for Seattle, Sept. 2; Portland, Oct. 7; Salem, Nov. 4; and Anchorage, Nov. 18.

Further information concerning the series is available by contacting the Willamette University Office of External Education (370-6162).

Business Reporting Conference draws top professionals to WU

A two-day workshop-conference for businessmen and reporters brought out suspicions and problems but was deemed by everyone involved to be a success.

Bringing together businessmen and business reporters is, well, risky business. Barbara Karmel of Willamette University's Atkinson School took the risk and resulting achievement has to be ranked somewhere on the scale of miracles between Johnny Vande Meer's two successive no-hitters and the raising of Lazarus.

The Conference on Business Reporting held May 21-22 at Willamette was simply a resounding success. Designed to create a better understanding as well as create a better line of communication between reporters and business, the two-day session certainly accomplished its mission in those respects.

Both reporters and businessmen seemed to agree that a real, if not openly visible, barrier existed between the two factions, creating everything from suspicion to out-and-out mistrust. The Conference on Business Reporting at least made an initial dent in that barrier along with exploding some myths and offering a genuine learning experience.

In short, the conference had everything anyone could ask for on a "Lou Grant" rerun and in terms of what might finally be accomplished, in terms of reporting skills and understanding, there was indeed a great deal more.

"It gave everyone a chance to state a position and get a lot of things out in the open," related Oregon Journal Business Editor Chuck Humble, who originally suggested the idea for the conference to Karmel in the fall of 1981. "I think it was a great success."

That reaction was dominant following the conference. Humble's idea blossomed under Karmel's direction and with the aid of a grant from the Gannett Foundation and sponsorship from the Oregon Newspaper Publisher's Association, Allied Daily Newspapers of Tacoma, the Foundation for American Communications in Los Angeles and the Associated Oregon Industries Foundation, Inc. of Salem, some high powered speakers and panelists were enlisted for the event.

Some 45 journalists and businessmen attended the conference representing 16 media organizations and several businesses throughout the Northwest. Individual and panel presentations along with concurrent workshops allowed for a special interest focus but the meat of the conference came basically from the panel presentations. It was here the worlds of business and journalism were able to best air their differences and their agreements.

Perhaps the most valuable session came on Friday afternoon and was appropriately (as it turned out) titled, "Media vs. Business?" The question mark could well have been left off though at the end there was obviously an improved understanding between the two.

Andrew V. Smith, President of Pacific Northwest Bell, and Monford A. Orloff, Chairman and President of Evans Products in Portland, shared the business viewpoint and Stephen Dunphy, Business Editor of the Seattle Times and Gregory Cushman, Publisher of the Bend Bulletin, put out the news stand.

As expected Orloff's presentation aroused the majority of reaction. He and other members of Evans' executive branch had been the focus of an investigative piece in Willamette Week just a few days prior to the conference. He indicated that all was not "accurate" in the article and that efforts were not made to get "all the facts."

Ron Buel, Editor and Publisher of the Willamette Week got his chance for rebuttal a day later in his workshop on "In-Depth Reporting and Follow Up." He defended his reporter's handling of the story as it ran and noted he would "run it the same way if he had it to do again." According to Buel, every effort was made to get all of the facts and the problem lay with the inaccessibility of many top level businessmen.

The two views brought forth the gist of the conference—the fact that businessmen often feel the newsmen report without finding all of the facts or as Dr. Kevin Kelly, Senior Vice President and Economist for U.S. Bancorp, who opened the conference explained, "the failure to ask the second question"; and the fact that newsmen often feel they are not receiving access to all the necessary information.

The fact that the problem was brought to light at all seemed a major step in creating a solution. It certainly generated the greatest flow of ideas and made the other positive aspects of the conference a kind of delicious dessert to the main course.

And those other aspects were surely worthwhile. Kelly's presentation on "Ten Myths About Business and Economics" was well received and informative. And further presentations in a workshop setting by Kelly and Professor James Hanson of the Willamette Department of Economics and Professor Earl Littrell of the Atkinson School proved one of the most successful formats of the conference.

"The workshops let reporters and, I think, business people get to the specifics, and move to the area of greatest interest to them. It was a chance to improve your knowledge and your skills," continued Humble.

The workshops on reporting skills held Saturday gave the news media people a chance to take over and show the whats and hows of their work.

Another highlight was an appearance by internationally acclaimed author and journalist, Monsieur Henri Lepage, whose book "Tomorrow, Capitalism," is a bestseller in Europe. Lepage addressed the National Press Club prior to appearing at the conference.

A special conference steering committee included Ed Bassett, editor of the Statesman-Journal in Salem; David L. Bennett, executive director of the Oregon Newspaper Publisher's Association; Paul R. Conrad, executive director of Allied Daily Newspapers of Tacoma and Robert Ingalls, former publisher of the Corvallis Gazette-Times. They joined with Karmel in organizing the successful conference which was supported by a grant from the Gannett Foundation.

When it was over the general feeling was that once is not enough. Most of those who attended were hoping for a repeat performance next year. The success of the initial conference would seem to indicate that a second miracle might indeed be possible.

WORKING TOGETHER

Teamwork pays off for grads

Deby Barnhart and Ed Blatter have been pooling their talents for nearly a year and it is paying off for both the new publishers and their Portland reading audience.

Story By
Tina Richards

Getting to and from work is no problem these days for the staff at "Multnomah Monthly" magazine, it's just getting out of bed after working a typical 20 hour day that's hard. Deby Barnhart WU '76 and Ed Blatter WU '77, who met and married while students at Willamette, publish the new magazine out of their home on S.E. 33rd and Tibits in Portland, so traffic jams are no problem.

Except for a small sign that reads Multnomah Monthly Magazine, on the door, you wouldn't suspect their four bedroom home to be the hub of production. But once you get past the living room, you become aware that this is indeed, the heart of a thriving business operation. Lingering smells of paper and glue lead you to one of two bedrooms they have converted to accommodate the business. The studio houses a light table and drafting board for layout and pasteup. Recent editions of the magazine and copy for future issues are scattered about the room. Another of the bedrooms has been converted into office space for writing, editing and handling business matters. The remaining bedrooms are used for sleeping, when time allows. However, the basement has not been left untouched, for about one quarter of the area has been renovated into a darkroom.

Writing, editing, promoting, designing and financing is blended with eating, sleeping and vacationing, though the latter three elements sometimes suffer. It is easy to see that Deby and Ed are a cohesive team. Their understanding and respect for one another shine through as they discuss their responsibilities as business and marriage partners.

A desire to combine their skills and produce something together didn't start last September 1981 when the first issue of the "Multnomah Monthly" magazine, a cultural affairs and humour tabloid, appeared on the newsstand. The magazine is the culmination of that desire and the result of planning and hustle on the part of Barnhart and Blatter. The desire itself was culled through their many experiences together beginning at Willamette. And the road to the Multnomah Monthly proved a satisfying one from the start.

As an English major at Willamette, Blatter's first real interest in journalism came when then Public Relations Director, Jan McMillin, suggested he contact John McMillan, publisher of the Statesman-Journal newspaper and inquire about an internship as a newswriter. He did, and resulting internship put him on the road to a career in journalism. Ed notes his English professor, Gerry Bowers, as a great inspiration and gives him credit for his knowledge of the "written word."

As Ed was whiling away the hours behind a typewriter, Deby gained experience working at the legislature, majoring in Urban Planning. Before entering Willamette as a freshman, one of her priorities was to travel to France for a semester of study. It became a reality when she made the trip under the direction of Bill Duvall. It proved a highlight of her Willamette experience and she credits Duvall with making it a success. "Professor Duvall has a great understanding and feel for French culture and he generates that warmth to his students and to the people he meets in France. He is a definite asset to U.S. foreign relations."

Deby graduated from Willamette in 1976 and landed a job with the State Corrections Division as an administrative assistant. She discovered then, that office work wasn't for her. She did, however, discover an interest in photography at that time and enrolled in a class at Chemeketa Community College to hone the new-found skills.

Ed, who had taken one year off from studying to work and get ahead financially, continued at Willamette another year. The White Coaster, a gathering place for Willamette students, was his place of employment until the summer before he returned to school when he became a sanitation engineer on campus. "When I visit the school now, the garbage doesn't smell so bad," laughs Ed.

When Ed graduated in 1977, the couple moved south to Berkeley, California where Ed would complete his master of journalism degree from the University of California at Berkeley.

"Berkeley is a lot different than Salem. You see just about everything in Berkeley and no one worries about being the odd-man-out, because everybody is different," says Ed of his two years in California. "You really get caught up in the energy of 17,000 people on the Berkeley campus. It's a lot different than the pace of the laid back 1,200 undergrads at Willamette."

Ed enjoyed studying with such celebrated journalists as Bernard Taper, Professor and a staff writer for the New Yorker.

He also recalls Lacey Fosburgh who was the primary reporter on the Mr. Goodbar murder for the New York Times. Her reports were the background for the novel, "Searching for Mr. Goodbar."

Another journalist he notes is Ed Bayley, who, prior to becoming Dean of the Journalism School, was the star political reporter for the Milwaukie Journal and his work helped bring McCarthyism to a close. Bayley is the author of the award-winning book, "Joe McCarthy and the Press."

Away from the Berkeley campus, Deby was combining her experiences in Europe and her degree in Urban Planning, working for an international finance firm out of San Francisco. She also spent time sharpening her photographic skills taking shots in and around Berkeley of landscapes and the Botanical Gardens. Out of those photographs, and others, the Barnhart and Blatter team produced a calendar they distributed to family and friends as Christmas gifts. While gaining more and more experience with the camera, a need for a photo lab arose. The result was a home darkroom.

Soon after Ed's graduation from Berkeley, Deby's desire to return to France and Ed's curiosity, took them to Europe to take in as much culture and as many sights as time would allow.

As they traveled together, more and more, talk turned to the business adventure they dreamed of making together. In fact the seeds for their current publication were planted through many of their experiences in the cultural and artistic centers of the world. Bringing a little of that flavor home was only natural.

As native Oregonians, Deby from Grants Pass and Ed from Portland, returning to Oregon wasn't hard to do. They decided on Portland as a home. It had everything to offer them culturally, intellectually and socially. After settling in, Ed became editor-in-chief at the St. Johns Review in north Portland and Deby found a job with an architectural firm as project secretary, later becoming photographer for the urban planning department.

For Ed, working at the Review was a great experience. As the man in charge he learned just about everything there is to know about running a small community newspaper.

"I learned about paper, printing, typesetting, and I wrote, edited, pasted up copy and took photographs along with all the other duties that go along with publishing," says Ed.

Keeping busy was not a problem. "The only thing wrong with it, was that I felt so confined, working with such a small population is just one area of Portland."

At about the same time that Ed began to feel confinement settling in, something happened in Deby's life that prompted the joint venture and the realization of their dreams—the risk that would change their lives.

Deby's grandfather died, and during the funeral service while the clergyman reviewed her grandfather's life, she was struck by all he had done in his life. "He really accomplished a lot of things in his lifetime. I wanted to do the same and leave something of my accomplishments behind to encourage others."

Motivated by the inspirational life her grandfather had led, the couple made a major decision in their lives.

With a little research and a lot of discussion they discovered that Portland was without a medium for the artistic community to publish its works. It offered an opportunity custom-made for the twosome. "We wanted something that would entertain us as well as give the artist, particularly the writers and illustrators, a forum to communicate with one another. Portland is becoming more of a cultural center for artists. Seattle and San Francisco are getting too big, so artists are starting to stay in town and until now, they haven't had a regular medium that lets them express themselves artistically."

So with a graduate degree in journalism, newswriting experience, photography skills, travel experience and $5,000 the couple began to move toward publication of the "Multnomah Monthly" magazine. Naming the magazine was not as easy as the illiterative title might indicate. The final decision was based on the fact they wanted to reach a broad area on a monthly basis and indicate to readers that it was, indeed, a magazine and not a newspaper.

Of course, all entrepreneurs wish for instant success, and so did Deby and Ed. The ultimate goal is to resemble the sophisticated "New Yorker" magazine. But first things first. And the first obstacle came before an issue even hit the presses.

"We thought we could send someone else out to sell ads for our never-been-published magazine while we concentrated on production," says Editor Ed. "We found out we had to go out and sell ourselves and our magazine in order for the advertisers to buy. They don't want to buy if they think the publication isn't going to make it."

So, Deby took on the responsibilities of Director of Advertising. "At first it was hard for me to approach these people, but now that they know more about us and have discovered that our publication is a good one, they are a lot less hesitant to buy."

Ad space ranges from $45 for a small space up to $565 for a full page ad.

Five thousand dollars seems a small investment to start a business, but Ed and Deby made it work. "We figured we didn't have that much to lose. Some people have a lot more money to start with and can afford to lose a lot more," Ed says.

"We were very careful with ours," Deby agreed.

Although they paid their contributors well at first, they found that the bulk of their expense comes from paper and printing costs. Another detriment in obtaining instant success, was learning about the business aspect of being independent. "We didn't realize all the headaches of bookkeeping, not to mention the taxes involved," says Deby. "Now that we've learned about expenses, we don't pay our contributors nearly as much as they are worth," the editor says.

Much of the material for "Multnomah Monthly" is unsolicited, so a big part of Ed's time is spent editing copy. He does, however, find time to write a monthly column entitled "Fifty Years Ago." It is nostalgia all the way taking the reader back to a time when trolley cars were common sights in downtown Portland and Herbert Hoover was President. He also tries to contribute at least one of his own articles to the meat of the publication.

"We don't necessarily have a theme for each issue, but I do try to pick material that I can tie together," states Ed. But, if you're looking for conventional, everyday feature articles in "Multnomah Monthly," you won't find them. The off-beat is more likely to appear, such as "Ain't No Cracks in Them Sidewalks," a satire on city repair of sidewalk cracks, or "Ken Kesey: The Economics of Hemp." A series headed "Murder on a Full Stomach" is about detective adventures around Portland, and at the least is off-beat. In addition to the stories, all kinds of poetry is submitted. Reed College students have become frequent contributors to this new cultural medium. A regular column entitled "All the News to Give You Fits," will give you fits, and illustrations range in nature from satirical epics of man's dependence on technology to historical changes and simple comic reviews of everyday life.

The magazine is designed to appeal to a broad audience, though the editors expect that young professionals would be the primary readers. And the price is right. Where in Portland can you find this magazine? Specialty retail shops and gourmet restaurants in the Portland metropolitan area are main vendors, as well as in and around the colleges and universities in town, with 16 percent of their 25,000 printed copies distributed in the Beaverton area. And who said you can't buy anything for a nickel anymore? The "Multnomah Monthly's" news stand price is five cents, but you can pick it up for free from most of the locations that carry it.

A plan to spread further into the suburbs and to expand their circulation to 75,000 is in the works, but they can only do so much with such a small staff. Right now, Deby and Ed spend about one week out of every month working 10-hour days and distribute "Multnomah Monthly" themselves. A truck was purchased to get them to the Tualatin-Yamhill Press in Hillsboro, where the publication is printed, to pick up the tabloid, drive back to their home and office to bundle in stacks of one to 200 and back out to the numerous distribution points they have chosen. It's the kind of hustle and bustle that can keep you slim and trim. And when it's over, a new issue begins right away, though Deby and Ed can finally find some brief periods to relax and maybe take a trip to the coast before tackling their next assignment.

While Ed spends much of his time toiling over the typewriter or the paste-up table, Deby splits time between the darkroom (page 7) and ad sales, where the telephone proves a most helpful tool. The two young business people do all the editing, ad sales, paste-up, design, distribution and much of the writing and photography. So far, it has been worth the effort.

"At first, we couldn't even do that," Deby remembers. "But now we have it down to a cycle. After delivery there is time for relaxation, and then we start thinking and planning for our next issue."

Even though Deby and Ed didn't see instant success, and have had a few sleepless nights, they discovered that perseverance and longevity are pillars on their side. "We've seen so many magazines or newspapers go under after just one printing, that we feel very fortunate that our magazine is still going," remarked Deby.

"Multnomah Monthly" is not only still going, but it is getting stronger. With dedication to each other and to their magazine, it seems likely that the "Multnomah Monthly" will be around for a long, long time.

LATE ARRIVAL

Salem, Oregon 97302

We've celebrated our 50th reunion in high style: 56 members were in attendance. Treasured as the Jason Lee medalion (awarded each of us at the banquet Saturday night) are other features of the May 8 weekend. Much laughter, too much good food (provided by Salem classmates) left uneaten because it is still bad manners to talk with a full mouth—having to recognize one another by staring openly at the old Wallulah pictures which decorated our name labels—all this and much, much more noted at the Friday night welcoming party.

Proving once again that the more you put into a thing the more you get out of it, Class President Lloyd Girod may have been the happiest participant in the entire proceedings. His handwritten letters had much to do with getting us out of our easy chairs for this exciting occasion. They may also have given a financially-troubled U.S. Post Office just the boost it needed.

A feature all loved was Eloise White Hardy's introduction of us as we were: A class that never won a Glee (and we still can't sing), but we made a joyful noise when we tried to at our luncheon May '80 although our songs won top ratings; a class that seldom did anything together, etc.

Contributing mightily to this long-planned reunion were the committee meetings for which Esther Girod Jensen, Astoria, Lucille Millhollin Herrick, Aloha, were hostesses with Marjorie Moser Durham, Seattle, joining them in helping provide delicious luncheons. Lloyd and Elsie Girod and Hayes and Sarah Beall often provided transportation—and I may have left out some important contributors, but Willamette's recent offerings for alumni haven't included memory courses.

Some, alas, could not be in Salem on May 8.

Minnie Shrode Woodbury, retired from teaching English and history in El Centro, stayed home in San Diego with her husband, Harry B. Woodbury, retired from civil service, who was in poor health this past spring.

Dr. Charles Campbell and his wife, Della, were in Germany keeping professional engagements made long ago.

Cecile Steele Trost, Aurora, retired educator, graduated from OCE, not WU, and earned her master's degree from U. of O. That's okay, Cecile, once in '32 you're there for life!

Lois Jean Rasch Lindley, who also finished at U. of O., came from Washington, D.C. for the great 50th. Muriel "Pat" White Buick came from way out west, Burnside, Masterton, New Zealand.

ALUMNI NEWS

Portland attorney Lewis King, '67, LLB '70, congratulates Lloyd Girod, '32 who took over as President of the Willamette University Alumni Association at the annual Alumni Day Banquet in May. Girod is retired from a career in education and owner of supermarkets in the Willamette Valley. King will serve on the Board of Trustees for one more year as Past-President and Girod will be the President of the Alumni Association for two years. Girod is a representative on the Board of Trustees along with new President-elect Marvin Case, '65, owner and publisher of "The Reflector" in Battleground, WA. The third member-at-large representing the Alumni Association to the Board of Trustees is David Russell, '64, broker and real estate consultant in Portland. The final elected officer to the Willamette University Alumni Association is Barbara Dennis Barrie, '59, secretary, from Salem.

Alumni Day brings back 800 to Willamette

More than 800 Willamette alumni were on hand May 8 for the annual Alumni Day celebration on campus. Special events, reunions and campus tours along with the Alumni Banquet highlighted the day's activity.

Every state in the Union was represented at the special day as well as New Zealand, Canada, Japan and Mexico.

Many alumni responded to the evaluation forms which listed the key reasons why most alumni return to campus for the event and also offered suggestions for improvements of Alumni Day activities.

Four reasons were most prominent on the evaluations in explaining why alumni return to campus. Seeing former classmates topped the list along with time to visit, seeing the campus and professors and taking in the changes and hearing updates as to what is happening at the University.

As it turned out, 77 percent of those returning to campus were at Willamette for special class reunions. Many of those attending Alumni Day stayed in dorms, which proved especially popular with those who traveled a great distance to attend.

Suggestions for improvements included more time and places to visit with classmates, more publicity for special features (such as the Art Show held Friday, May 7), making brochures as clear as possible and having class reunion committee letters help explain special events pertaining to specific classes.

The information gathered from the evaluation forms will be turned over to a special committee of the Alumni Board to help set up next year's reunions.

Minshuku Tour slated by Alumni Association

A few spots still remain for the 17-day Minshuku Tour of Japan sponsored by Willamette University Alumni Association, Japan Air Lines and Independent Travel of Santa Monica, CA. The tour package includes airfare, an English-speaking guide, ground transportation, accommodations, some meals and sight-seeing.

The tour will visit 10 Japanese cities in all and includes five full days in Tokyo. Tour members will stay at Minshuku (Japanese family style inns) and will be able to visit various historical and cultural points of interest.

The tour is slated to begin on Saturday, Oct. 16 and the return trip is scheduled for Monday, Nov. 1.

Registration information and tour details are available by contacting Colleen Corcoran at the Willamette University Alumni Office 370-6356 or Gene Leonardson at the Willamette Office of External Education 370-6162.

Willamette Chapter gets Delta Theta award

The Oregon Gamma Chapter of Phi Delta Theta Fraternity at Willamette University was honored recently by the General Fraternity with the fraternity's Silver Star Chapter Designation. Silver Stars are awarded to chapters which have achieved excellence in scholarship, finances, pledge education programs, community service participation, and cooperation with general fraternity in reporting overall chapter operations.

The Willamette chapter was also awarded a Headquarters Trophy which goes to chapters scoring a perfect 100% reporting to General Headquarters. Reports include initiation and pledging records, chapter roster, membership transferring to alumni status, officer information and various financial reports.

The awards were presented at the fraternity's General Convention held earlier this summer in St. Louis.

Management seminars offered

Willamette's Office of External Education will offer a series of management training seminars for the owners and managers of small businesses, co-sponsored by the Atkinson Graduate School of Management and the Commercial Bank.

The series is slated to begin with a three-day workshop on "Working Capital Management" in October, followed by one-day workshops during each of the next five months.

The program will be repeated in six month cycles. Additional information is available by contacting the Office of External Education at Willamette

ON THE SCENE

Janet Rimerman

A 1978 graduate with a B.A. in both English and Art, Janet Rimerman offered a display of her work in painting and printmaking.

A constant drive to surpass her own accomplishments and strengthen and develop her work and her style have led her to experiment in many different art forms.

Her work has been seen throughout Oregon, displayed at the Oregon School of Arts and Crafts Postcard Art, 1982; Bailey's Hairworks, 1981; Lakeridge High School Tenth Year Anniversary Show, 1980; the Ocean Shores Art Festival, among others. She also has contributed to a number of Oregon publications.

Stephen Carruthers

A 1979 graduate with a B.A. in Art, Stephen Carruthers provided a display of his ceramics.

Steve's work is non-functional and reflects the direction ceramic art has taken since the fifties. The nature of ceramics has progressed from almost strictly utilitarian to its present acceptance as an art form.

Steve is currently residing in Canby, Oregon, and plans to study landscape design at Portland Community College this fall.

Mary Jo Gilson

Mary Jo Gilson, a Willamette University graduate, and a native of the Pacific Northwest, has lived in Salem for the past 23 years. Her interest in oil painting began when she took a class in painting from Carl Hall as a student at Willamette.

She has studied under Dave Ewart, a realistic western artist, and has been exhibiting her paintings in Oregon and Washington for the past seven years. A realistic approach, and her attention to fine detail give her work a distinctive style. She gets many of her ideas while camping and backpacking, and her favorite subjects are wilderness landscapes, wild flowers, and small wild animals.

Heitho Bokides-Reuter

An exhibit of sculptures in bronze was provided by Heitho Bokides-Reuter, a 1976 graduate with a B.S. in Art.

Applying a lost wax method to bronze to create a medium of self-expression distinctly her own, her bronze abstracts relate to flight, music and dance and have been shown at the Maude Kerns Gallery in Eugene, the Albany Creative Guild and in other local shows. Her work has been used in a 1981 television commercial for Skies Jewelry.

She received an M.F.A. at the University of Oregon in 1979, and currently lives and works in Lebanon, Oregon.

Jane E. Wallace

Jane E. Wallace, a 1979 graduate with a B.A. in English, has provided a display of her work in the field of calligraphy.

"Calligraphy," a word of Greek origin, meaning "beautiful writing," thrives in Oregon today. Its application ranges from utilitarian to artistic, from name tags and wedding invitations to framed compositions.

Jane has found a calligraphic career of teaching and freelancing that seemed to develop quite naturally from the appreciation for language, literature and visual forms she developed while studying at Willamette.

She is now living and working in Corvallis, Oregon.

NEW COACH

Broeker readies for first season at Willamette helm

By Steve Lathrop

After Joe Broeker had considered all the variables it didn't take him long to trade coastlines and jump the Virginia beaches for the Oregon shoreline. He was just coming home, after all.

Broeker is Willamette's new football coach, taking over in February of last year and eagerly awaiting the start of the 1982 season. It will be Broeker's first as a head coach but to date he hasn't had much of an opportunity to get any butterflies.

"It's a great feeling, getting ready for a new football season," says the coach, "but I just haven't had a chance to get excited yet. As things get closer I'm sure the excitement will hit pretty hard."

Broeker has tasted the excitement of a new season before, 16 times as an assistant coach and before that as a player at Washington State University, where he earned his degree and academic All-American honors in 1965. The coaching followed at Pacific Lutheran (10 years), where he also was head baseball coach for a time, Baylor University and finally, the University of Richmond.

At Richmond, Broeker coordinated the recruiting program and coached defensive ends and linebackers. The lure of that head coaching job, along with two other key variables—the chance to return to the Northwest and Willamette itself—brought Broeker to Salem.

"It was a combination of things," admits Broeker about his choice to take the Willamette position. "Willamette itself played a big part. It is a fine school with an outstanding reputation. And getting back to the Northwest was important. I like it here."

So Broeker came back, fulfilling his desire to become a head coach and blending the atmosphere he enjoys. The work began right away. Broeker joined the WU staff with almost half of the recruiting season already past. And as soon as he arrived on campus he instituted priority number one in his head coaching plan—recruiting people into the program.

"We got a late start but we have made a strong attempt to catch up," notes the new head coach. "It's very hard to assess our recruiting because you never know how a player will perform until the season begins. We do know we have good numbers and the quality of the people we are getting is good."

Getting the type of individual to fit Broeker's style and philosophy is indeed important to success down the line. And Broeker's philosophy stresses character.

"We are people coaches before we are football coaches. There is a great educational opportunity within the game of football. The values the game offers to the individual are important to us. The fact that football is a team sport provides for an educational experience. It's a group of people working together to achieve a common goal," stresses Broeker.

"When a football player graduates from Willamette University it is our hope that he'll look back and say that football 1, 2, 3, and 4 were among the best courses he took here."

That philosophy of "people coaching" carries over when Broeker looks at the goals of the program. It is obvious he is looking to build character and help athletes grow as individuals.

"Our most important goal is that Willamette football players represent themselves and the school with class. That means what I call, total release—competing in a positive, aggressive way for a full 60 minutes. We want that total release in everything they do. Winning is only a by-product."

Broeker is hoping to regain some of the Willamette football glory of the past and he is using Willamette's outstanding academic reputation as a comparison, something for his team to shoot at.

"Willamette is ranked as one of the outstanding universities academically on the west coast. To expect anything less in quality from the football program is not something we want to do. The University's goal is to attain academic quality. We want our football program to compliment that goal."

So Broeker began almost from scratch. He knew he had more than 40 football players coming back but the key to building is to recruit people into the program. He has been working triple overtime to accomplish what most Northwest Conference coaches have had a full season to get done. Broeker has been a success. He is expecting 30 new faces to join his veterans when daily doubles open August 27. And the coach proudly points out that the new faces list will hold at least 20 from the state of Oregon. It is testimony to his deter-

Season opens Sept. 18

The 1982 Willamette football season will get underway with traditional opening day opponent, Western Oregon State College on Saturday, Sept. 18, at 1:30 p.m. in McCulloch Stadium.

New head coach Joe Broeker will unveil his attack featuring more than 40 returning lettermen and a strong class of new recruits. The new look Bearcats have four home games set for 1982. After the WOSC opener, Willamette will be at home against Eastern Oregon on Oct. 9, Pacific Lutheran on Oct. 23 and Lewis and Clark on Nov. 6.

All Willamette home games are scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. in McCulloch Stadium. Ticket information is available by contacting the Willamette University Athletic Department at 370-6420.

Semi-Tailgater set

Salem and Portland area alumni are hosting a "Semi Tailgate Party" before the season opening football game on Sept. 18. The party is set to begin at 11 a.m. and will include brief presentations by President Jerry Hudson, new head football coach Joe Broeker and former Bearcat head man Ted Ogdahl.

Food and beverages will be available and cost for the activity is only $3.50 per person. Discount tickets will be available for the football game against Western Oregon State College at 1:30 p.m.

The gathering will take place at Pringle Park and is open to all interested alumni. Further information is available by contacting the Willamette University Alumni Office.

Broeker also had to hustle together a staff in short time but as of early August his eight-man contingent had been assembled. Dave Ackerman, Jim Hellyer, Val Barnes and Harry Winchell make up the offensive side of the staff with Ackerman, the former North Salem High School head coach, the offensive coordinator. Wayne Amos, Art Nafgart, Ken Garland and John Bartlett compose the defensive staff, with Amos, who is the only full-time assistant on the staff, the defensive coordinator.

And the head coach and his staff have been piecing together their plan of attack throughout the summer. Broeker believes the pieces are falling together nicely.

"I am very pleased with our staff. A head coach is only as strong as the people who work with him. I think we have people who are both talented and who will establish a true loyalty to Willamette. The kind of loyalty you can build with," emphasized Broeker.

The emphasis on loyalty isn't surprising. He expects it and so far he has found it. An early meeting last spring with the returning lettermen established some of it. Before he is through, Broeker is looking to create it in alumni, faculty, student body and community. It's what he calls a "football family" and he expects everyone to belong.

There will be adjustments to make and the new head coach is the first to admit that. "I can't say how long it will take. When a new coach comes in there is always an adjustment period but we want to instill some positive work habits right away and go from there. Nothing comes easy. We expect to work for our support."

Broeker also expects to keep things exciting. Using a multiple offense, the coach will rely on both an aerial and a ground attack to accomplish his scoring goals but he notes that he is flexible and his program will be as well.

"We will build to fit our recruits. The type of people we have will dictate what we do both offensively and defensively."

That defense will use a 5-2 attack this season with plenty of options to take advantage of whatever weaknesses the staff can find in the opposition.

As Broeker points out, nothing is certain and until the season is going there aren't going to be any predictions. The coach comes in knowing he is competing in one of the strongest NAIA Division II conferences in the country but competing is something the new coach likes to stress and he is confident that his team will be competitive with anyone.

"We can't guarantee wins or losses. We can only guarantee that 'total release.' We'll compete. And we are looking forward to it."

Broeker's enthusiasm is honest and his hopes are realistic. And the variables are continuing to fall into place.
