125th Birthday

Students participate in what they termed an "all-campus caker" as student body president Bill Alberger cuts into the mammoth birthday cake in remembrance of Willamette's 125th birthday. (See pages 2 and 3)

Campus CAPSULES

From the Tower tidbits in previous issues of The Alumnus have been well received. You've told us so. And that's why you'll no longer be reading them in The Alumnus. You'll see why when Today comes. That's a new publication you'll be receiving between issues of The Alumnus. Willamette Today will simply be the Tower items expanded, items on current campus happenings and trends. Look for the first issue of Willamette Today in March. Meanwhile, we offer these campus capsules.

IN DECEMBER Willamette paid $110,500 to the Salem Urban Renewal Agency for four parcels of land between Mill and Bellevue streets. This was the first purchase in the plan to buy 20 acres for over $700,000 and also the first use of urban renewal land. Construction has already started on the newly acquired property. Sorority houses for Alpha Chi Omega and Delta Gamma will join the other three sororities, Alpha Phi, Pi Beta Phi and Chi Omega, on Mill Street for an authentic sorority row.

A SHOW of Armour brought Willamette to its feet last semester. Satirist supreme, Richard Armour, displayed the humor that has sold 32 books and more than 5,000 pieces of light verse and prose to over 150 magazines. He gets enthusiastic response from listeners and readers, and one reader, a dean at Swarthmore College, responded in "Armour style." Armour once wrote:

"It's hard to know what to deduce
From girls who wear their sweaters loose."

Which prompted the dean to write:

"You can't be sure you're always right,
Even when they wear them tight."

Another case of a dean getting the last word.

SPEAKING of Deans, Dr. Robert Gregg who retired last year as Dean of the College of Liberal Arts, lectured for a few months in Australia and is now completing a trip around the world. And former Dean of Students, Walter Blake, is Oregon's representative of the New York Reading Reform Foundation, a non-profit corporation promoting a change in the method of teaching reading in the schools. He was unsuccessful last year in his bid to become Oregon's superintendent of public instruction.

MANY PROUD professors at Willamette have watched their sons and/or daughters graduate from the University at various times, but for political science professor Ted Shay, the mid-year commencement ceremony provided a different thrill. His lovely wife Shirley, who interrupted her college education 14 years ago to marry Ted, received her Bachelor of Arts degree while their four school-age children looked on. You guessed it, her degree is in political science, and she's now working as secretary to the administrative assistant of the Speaker of the Oregon House of Representatives. Are they raising politicians?

GIMMICKS for charity have been employed recently by two of Willamette's fraternities. The men of Phi Delta Theta "kidnapped" the presidents of the five sororities and held them for ransom — canned foods and other groceries that were turned over to needy families at Thanksgiving. This raised the eyebrows of Beta Theta Pi . . . in fact junior Bob Millikan donated his right eyebrow in a "raise an eyebrow for the March of Dimes" fund-raising stunt. All living organizations were to offer sealed bids for the pleasure of shaving off his eyebrow, but if a "committee for the preservation of the right eyebrow" can top the bids, then the March of Dimes will be all the richer and Millikan will be able to wipe both brows for his "close shave."

OUR COVER photo shows the six foot tall, 400 pound birthday cake that was baked by Saga Food Service for the 125th birthday observance. The ingredients included 600 eggs, 143 pounds of sugar, 47 pounds of shortening, 54 pounds of flour, 24 pounds of milk, 2½ pounds of baking powder and 1½ pounds of vanilla. It provided 1,600 servings.

Willamette

by Robert Moulton Gatke, '19

Faith and foresight of the pioneer missionaries and settlers in Oregon led to the birth of Willamette on Feb. 1, 1842. In observing the 125th birthday, the University recalled the events surrounding the meeting at the Old Mission House, attended by Jason Lee, his collaborators of the Methodist mission and a few independent settlers. They were all deeply concerned that Oregon had no school for their children or for the children that would survive the tortuous hardships of the Oregon Trail and settle Oregon.

This meeting elected a board of trustees, with Lee its first president. There is direct and unbroken continuity from the board of 1842 to the Willamette board of today, and George Atkinson is the fourteenth president since Jason Lee. The board issued, less than two months after its organization, a statement of purpose. It said that, "whereas it is believed to be highly important to the future welfare of this rising community, that a permanent literary institution be established in this valley, of such a character as fully to meet the present and prospective wants of the children and youth of Oregon, in which they may receive that intellectual and moral training which alone can prepare them for respectability and usefulness, therefore a respectable number of the inhabitants of the Willamette settlement have entered into arrangements for the purpose of raising funds and carrying into operation a respectable boarding-school.

"It is also contemplated, as soon as the community and the resources of the institution shall justify it, that it will be come a university. The contemplated institution is to be called the 'Oregon Institute' . . ."

The little group of men had taken upon themselves the heroic effort to create a university in the wilderness of the Pacific Northwest, and never rested until they had their school chartered as Willamette University in 1853.

To measure the faith of these Methodist missionaries, we need only recall the conditions in the Pacific Northwest in 1842 when Willamette was created. The entire region from Alaska on the north to California on the south, and from the Pacific eastward to the Rockies, had no determined sovereignty, and was held in joint-occupation by the United States and Great Britain. Not until four years after the founding date of Willamette did the two Anglo-Saxon nations divide the territory between them and establish the present boundaries.

It was a land of almost untouched wilderness. There was no Portland and no Seattle, nor any of the smaller cities in-between. Along the north bank of the Columbia there was Fort Vancouver, a trading post of the Hudson's Bay Co. At The Falls of the Willamette was the little village which was to become Oregon City. Along the Willamette, about thirty miles above The Falls, was Champoeg, a hamlet of four or five cabins and a wheat warehouse for Hudson's Bay Co. Across the open valley from Champoeg were scattered the farms of a few retired French Canadian servants of the fur company. Among them were a few Americans who had remained in Oregon from American exploring and fur trading expeditions. The French Canadians centered about the Catholic mission at St. Paul.

Where Salem now sprawls was the Mission headquarters, only recently moved from the old mission site, some ten miles north. Here were the two little mills built by the Mission, for flour and lumber, and the wheels of which were being turned by the waters of Mill Creek. About a mile away from the mills, on what is now the Willamette campus, was the Indian Mission Manual Labor School. That was Salem, then known simply as "The Mills".

Widely scattered over the valley was the first handful of American settlers who found the Willamette valley as the Land of Promise at the end of the tortuous Oregon Trail.

It was a land which had law and order, not the land of violence of Western fiction. It had an embryonic government established by simple compact by the settlers. It was called the Provisional Government because it was to serve until the question of sovereignty was determined, and the United States or Great Britain could establish a government. No American worth his salt thought it could ever be Great Britain! The government was very weak financially, supported by contributions in lieu of taxes, but it demonstrated a basic Anglo-Saxon respect for law and order.

The pioneer conditions, and the almost total lack of hard cash, is illustrated by the original subscription list to raise money to establish the new school, which totalled $3,970 from

Dr. Gatke continues work on The Chronicles of Willamette

22 pledges. The pledges were mostly from members of the Mission and, considering their lack of resources, represented a truly sacrificial offering placed on the high altar of Christian education. Gustavus Hines, one of the original board, tells us that many of these donors were "cheerfully giving from one quarter to one third of all they possessed in the world."

The pioneer economic conditions are illustrated by the terms of payment as given on the original subscription paper. "All donations to the institution shall be paid as follows: At least one third in cash orders on the mission or Vancouver, and the remainder in tame meat cattle, lumber, labor, wheat, or cash, according to the choice of the donors, said property to be delivered at the institution at the market price." Oregon had almost no gold or currency until after the California gold rush days when some of the new wealth came to Oregon.

The Provisional Government, as late as 1846, four years after Willamette was organized, sought to deal with the currency shortage in a law which provided "that in addition to gold and silver, treasury drafts, approved orders on solvent merchants, and good merchantable wheat at the market price, delivered at such places as it is customary for merchants to receive wheat at, shall be lawful tender for the payment of all debts contracted in Oregon territory, where no special contracts have been made to the contrary."

Such a wilderness needed no university in 1842 when Willamette was projected. But the children of the missionaries, and the few independent settlers, desperately needed an elementary school, without it the children of those who came to serve in an Indian mission, and remained to minister to the incoming settlers, would grow up in ignorance. It had to be a boarding school, for the settlers were scattered so thinly in the wilderness empire to have any one school serve their needs otherwise. But the faith of these missionaries held that Oregon would be settled, older youth would need to be served, and with increased, even though still meagre resources, they would have a Christian university to meet the needs of Oregon youth. They entered into a covenant to keep abreast of the educational needs of the pioneer state, elementary school, academy, liberal arts college, and in due time the first medical college and school of law. For 125 years the covenant has never been forgotten as Willamette has fulfilled the faith of its founders.

Language Building Bears Benefactor's Name

*Board of Governors,
New Trustees Approved*

The University's new language building, which is related to the library, will be known as Walton Hall. This new facility which equals the size of the library and houses modern language laboratories, classrooms and library stack space was named after the late William S. Walton, one of Salem's most noted citizens and financiers.

Recognized by the Board of Trustees for "his distinguished leadership in the business life of Salem and the State of Oregon," Walton made possible a charitable trust from which Willamette received the largest private gift that was applied to the construction of the building.

Born in Salem to a family of Oregon pioneers in 1884, Walton started his long career in finance as an office boy at the Ladd and Bush Bank in 1889 at the age of 15. Cited for his industriousness and dependability, he progressed through the departments of the bank. In 1914 he became assistant cashier. A year later he was cashier, in 1923 a director and in 1924 he was elected executive vice-president of the bank.

Walton served as a director until 1940 when Ladd and Bush was sold to the United States Bank of Portland. He became vice-president of U.S. National Bank of Portland that year and a director in 1947. He fully retired from the banking business in 1949, but he continued as a director until his death on Nov. 27, 1954, at the age of 70.

His energy and business acumen weren't applied only to banking. His interest included the development of industry in the area, and he had a major role in no less than 10 different companies dealing in such things as fruit, meat, pulp and paper, hops, fire insurance, savings and loans.

In 1908, he and U.S. Senator Charles L. McNary were instrumental in organizing the Salem Fruit Union. From this start, he branched into the following: treasurer and director, Valley Packing Company; president and director, Western Paper Converting Co.; officer, Pacific Coast Hop Stabilization Corp.; treasurer and director, Oregon Pulp and Paper Co.; director, Columbia River Paper Co.; director, Columbia River Paper Mills; vice-president and director, The Oregon Mutual Fire Insurance Co., McMinnville; director, the Equitable Savings & Loan Assn. of Portland; and director, Commonwealth, Inc., Portland.

He was on the Advisory Committees of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the War Finance Corporation, as well as being active in the Salem Cherrians, Salem Chamber of Commerce, Elks Lodge, Masonic Lodge, the Arlington Club of Portland, and the Episcopal Church.

A sketch of Walton written while he was still alive offers fitting tribute: "In the training school of life he has registered achievement and the depth and strength of his character have won him a secure place in the esteem of his fellow citizens."

The above factors and his generous benevolence have won him a lasting memorial at Willamette.

Science Division Gets Faculty and Equipment Grants

With the help of three foundation grants totaling $147,000, Willamette's science division will add four new instructors and new research equipment by next Fall.

The Tektronix Foundation, which provided a major gift in 1962 for the addition to Collins Hall, has now awarded the University $36,000 which will assist in the support of salary and research equipment for a new professor in physics over the next three years.

A second grant, from the Roscoe and Margaret Oakes Foundation of San Francisco, provides $35,000 to assist in salary support and equipment for a new biology professor over the next two years. An assistant professor has already been appointed for this grant, a Ph.D. candidate at Yale University in the field of molecular biology and bio-physics. He is Grant Thorsett, a 1962 graduate of Washington State University who holds his Master of Science degree from Yale.

A third grant in the program of adding four new science professors and equipment came from the Research Corporation in the amount of $76,000 for a three-year period. Entitled the Frederick Gardner Cottrell grant, the funds are made available "to liberal arts colleges and smaller universities to help strengthen research-oriented science departments which have undertaken programs for advancement toward excellence."

The Research Corporation previously awarded $20,000 to the science division in 1962, and it is the understanding that the new grant is in recognition of the progress shown by the division since then in expansion and curriculum review. In addition, chemistry professor Dr. Arthur D. Payton is utilizing a $2,000 Research Corporation grant toward the study of non-isothermal galvanic cells to get experimental data on their electromotive forces.

All of the grants were given with the understanding that the faculty additions will be part of the faculty build up projected in the current $12.5 million development program. The University expects to add 22 new faculty members in the liberal arts and music by 1972.

In addition to naming the language building which is related to the library, the Board of Trustees also elected five new trustees, named two members Life Member Trustees, and approved a 23-member Board of Governors.

The five new members are Ray N. Atkinson, '50; William H. Kilkenny, '41; George Rhoten, '27; Thomas B. Stoel; and Taul Watanabe, '41. In addition, Mrs. Hugh McGilvra, '28, was re-elected to the board.

Designated Life Member Trustees, the first two to ever be named, were Dr. J. C. Harrison, a member since 1933, and Clarence M. Bishop, a member since 1942. They were both cited for "long, faithful and distinguished service."

A previously adopted by-law amendment allowed for the establishment of the Board of Governors. Membership includes 18 trustees and five ex-officio members, George Atkinson, President of the Board; Robert C. Notson, Vice President; Tinkham Gilbert, Secretary; Roy Harland, Assistant Secretary; and Dr. G. Herbert Smith, University President.

The full board, which now numbers 49 members, will still have the responsibility of "enunciating basic policies and reviewing general affairs of the University, both educational and fiscal." This group will meet annually.

The Board of Governors will meet more often and have supervision of educational and fiscal operations of the University with the power to act within the basic policies of the full board.

The TRUMAN WESLEY COLLINS LEGAL CENTER will be ready for 300 law students this Fall. This new brick structure faces Lausanne Hall, while the old law building on State Street will house the economics and political science departments.

An attractive private dining room is one of two dining rooms in the Doney Hall addition. This one is for small gatherings of up to 24, while the other one serves all Doney Hall residents.

BRING ON "THE NEXT ONE"

The most important construction project on a university campus is "the next one," and the next one for Willamette University will be a University Center which will house recreation and lounge facilities, a bookstore, a snack bar, guest dining-conference rooms, and offices for student government and student publications.

On this page, the architect's first rendering of the front exterior elevation is shown, including to the right the same elevation of a proposed men's residence which can be built simultaneously or later.

The University Center by itself will cost approximately $1,250,000, of which $500,000 is already in hand. Half of the remaining $750,000 has been pledged by an anonymous donor on a challenge basis which requires the University to secure the last $375,000 from other sources by December 31, 1968. It is the university's intention to secure the $375,000 for matching purposes by December 31, 1967, a year ahead of schedule, so that construction may proceed as soon as possible.

All of the major construction projects now nearing completion and the University Center comprise but a part of the total construction program as outlined by the Board of Trustees in 1965. The advance toward a greatly improved and enlarged plant is expected to be completed by 1972, and to cost $6,500,000. An additional $6,000,000 is being sought during the same period, 1965-1972, to increase the endowment of the University and provide greater annual income for faculty expansion, faculty salaries, and scholarships.

The $12,500,000 Fund for Educational Excellence, or "FEE 125," adds up to $100,000 for each decade of the University's history since the founding in 1842, and when completed will provide well deserved and significant recognition of the great service and dedication of Willamette University's founders and all those who have sustained it through its first 125 years.

Complete and modern kitchen facilities are a highlight in the Doney Addition. The women of Doney and Lausanne Halls are served from this kitchen which connects the two buildings. An elevator facilitates service to Lausanne's two dining rooms.

The building project on Doney Hall also included a refurbishing of the dormitory's lounge area with new furniture, carpet and fixtures. The entire Doney Addition has been completed, with 20 new rooms ready for occupancy by 40 freshman women in the Fall.

The Role of the Intellectual

A thoughtful address by Dr. Carl Marcy, '34, Chief of Staff, Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who spoke at the Mid-Year Commencement.

Gilbert and Sullivan's Iolanthe has much droll advice. There is one bit that is appropriate for students, graduates and founders.

"When I went to the Bar as a very young man,
(Said to myself, said I)
I am an intellectual chap,
And think of things that would astonish you,
I often think it's comical
How nature always does contrive
That every boy and every gal,
That's born into the world alive,
Is either a little Liberal,
Or else a little Conservative!"

I wonder how many of this audience would today be communists if they had been born in Russia; or how many Russians would today be capitalists if they had been born in the United States; or how many Muslims would have been Christians if they had been born in a Christian country, or how many Christians would have been Muslims if born in the Middle East.

While we think of ourselves as rational people — especially when we finally get that college degree — as a practical matter we have had very little choice over our ideological, political, or religious beliefs. Like the color of the eyes or of the hair, most of us in this room were probably born Protestant, capitalist, and Republican. I suspect that nothing I say today, and little if anything you learned in college, will make any capitalist here embrace communism, or any Republican embrace the Democratic party — or vice versa on both points.

We will instead spend our lives supporting the beliefs to which we were born and resisting efforts to change them. We may indeed defend to the death an ideology to which we were born, fighting against peoples who will defend to their death the ideology to which they were born.

And we call ourselves intellectuals — rational people acting with reasoned wisdom!

A graduate of Willamette University should be an educated man — an intellectual, if you will. But what a graduate carries away from this University is something more than a few letters after his name; it is something more than the ability to recite chemical formulae; or to name the cabinet Departments, or to quote Freud or the New Testament.

The graduate should have acquired the capacity to study, to reflect, to reason, to speculate, and the capacity to try to make decisions on the basis of fact and judgment instead of emotion. It is a responsibility of the educated man constantly to examine his premises, his thinking, and his judgment.

If the American society is to grow materially and intellectually, it must admire those among us who on important issues can say: "I changed my mind." Certainly we should not enshrine those who say: "I have always been right and I know what is true".

I hope that Gilbert and Sullivan might describe your generation somewhat as follows:

We are such intellectual chaps—
That nature cannot contrive
To fix upon each gal and boy,
Born to this world alive,
A mind that's so inflexible
That nothing can be changed—
That all remains for us to do
Is simply to behave

From what I read in the press this college generation does not always behave. I do not mean that the measurement of your generation or the measurement of an intellectual is to be found in the capacity to tear up the society to which one was born. But surely the college graduate must have developed a capacity to take a good critical look at himself as well as at his society.

Already your generation is questioning and expressing itself. While I don't particularly admire some of the more extreme evidences of this generation's freedom, it is your duty to question.

Let me illustrate the kind of question you might ask. Why is it that we seem to accept the eminence of the United States? Why do we view ourselves as great and powerful and righteous? The quick answer, I suppose, is that by almost any measuring device one chooses, except population, the United States is number one. It has more money, more resources, more automobiles, more nuclear weapons, more tanks, more ships, more aircraft, than any other nation. In fact, the United States has so much surplus military equipment that it is the world's most prodigious salesman of conventional arms.

Has the United States become a great power because it is a nation of a new and superior breed of people? Is the United States so eminent because its Government is better than that of other nations?

It would be close to sacrilege to suggest that the United States owes its present position to something other than the genius of its people. Nevertheless, it is possible that its greatness depends not so much on the unique qualities of Americans but at least in part upon the combination of natural endowments to which they fell heir and upon the fact that other nations, which were once eminent, have failed to maintain their power and influence.

Fortunate indeed is the nation in having an equable climate, a relatively homogeneous people, a rich land — so rich indeed that we feed much of the world — and vast natural resources of minerals and forests. For better or worse, we are citizens of the world's only superpower.

Instead of boasting of this eminence, however, we might better be humbly grateful for the natural endowments that have come to us. Most Americans are citizens of this fortunate land not by choice, but by chance. And we might well remember that humility is a virtue.

The acid test of American leadership in the world is yet before us. The test is whether we have the ability to make wise use of our power.

Contemplate for a moment this historic fact: No great nation in all history has long survived as a great nation. The history of the rise and fall of the Roman Empire is covered in five volumes. Where today are the empires of the Manchus, the Spanish, the Portuguese, the French, the Germans, or the British?

The lesson of history seems to be that among states, eminence, power and influence, are of short duration. If this be true, then is it not proper that we ask ourselves: what of our own future as a great power? Is the United States destined for some reason to survive in greatness where others have failed? Or must it expect gradual disintegration and decline and its replacement in eminence by some other great power or complex of great powers?

In the past great powers have failed to maintain their position for two fundamental reasons. In the first place, power breeds counter-power. In the seventeenth century, John Tillotson wrote: "Those who are in highest places, and have the most power, have the least liberty, because they are most observed."

The United States is in that position today. Many nations of the world focus their attention on the United States. When the United States exercises its power, those who are jealous of that power, those who are fearful, and even those who are grateful for that power are, nevertheless, prone to be critical of its use. They suspect, as Lord Acton once wrote, that "power tends to corrupt; absolute power corrupts absolutely."

There is already evidence that American power is being

"While I don't particularly admire some of the more extreme evidences of this generation's freedom, it is your duty to question."

counterbalanced. De Gaulle's France has asked the United States to remove its forces from France. Turkey has recently taken steps to limit the freedom of movement of American soldiers stationed in that country. Pakistan has moved perceptibly out of the area of United States influence. And, finally, a recent poll in Europe indicated that 46 percent of those polled thought the world was further from peace as a result of United States policies. (New York Times, October 31, 1966).

The second fundamental reason why in the past great powers have failed to maintain their greatness is that they have taken their role as world leader so seriously that they have forgotten their internal needs. Rome worried about her empire while her domestic society disintegrated. Today the British empire is granting freedom to its former colonies while the Labor Government struggles to modernize its industrial plant so that it may survive and retain some semblance of affluence.

Has the United States become so preoccupied with bringing its version of an American peace — a pax Americana — to all the world that it is in danger of so expanding its overseas commitments that its domestic society will be undermined?

Let me make it clear that I am not against some sharing of wealth with the less fortunate people and nations of the world. I am suggesting that the United States seems to have a propensity for the verbal, and actual, expansion of American overseas commitments to such a degree that the nation may either be forced to renege on its commitments, or find them so heavy as to deny support essential to prevent its domestic society from disintegration.

"Today we seem to be moving in a direction in which our commitments are gradually exceeding our power to give them effect."

It was in 1943 that Walter Lippmann wrote: "In foreign relations, as in all other relations, a policy has been formed only when commitments and power have been brought into balance."

Today we seem to be moving in a direction in which our commitments are gradually exceeding our power to give them effect. I have suggested that you consider whether there is danger that the United States will rise and fall as have all great powers in the past. I have noted that the critical observer can already find the seeds of a weakening of American power and influence by observing signs of anti-United States coalitions developing abroad and by detecting an inability to deal with signs of domestic weakness within the United States while we concentrate on those symptoms everywhere else in the world.

It is your responsibility and mine to so act that we in the United States can break this cycle of the rise and fall of great nations — this great nation in particular. How do we break this cycle? For one thing we must develop and maintain a capacity to take a good many critical looks at ourselves.

Here are a few examples of what I mean when I say we must maintain a capacity to take critical looks at ourselves. (1) In the Washington Daily News of October 13 there was a press report (UPI) from Saigon which read in part as follows: "Viet Cong guerrillas used civilians as human shields to escape a fight with American paratroopers today."

In the United States Army Digest printed in August 1966 there is a section on advice on warfare in Vietnam. That article advises American troops, and I quote, "On entering the village . . . Utilize villagers to precede the entrance of troops." Maybe the Viet Cong have been reading United States pamphlets.

(2) Ambassador Harriman while in Ceylon on October 30 is reported in the New York Times as stating that it was impossible for North Vietnam to gain its objectives "militarily" in Vietnam and that any impression that the United States would tire of the war was entirely false.

Now let me read that statement substituting the words of Ho Chi Minh for Harriman and transposing the words "United States" and "North Vietnam". The statement would then read as follows: Ho Chi Minh stated that it was impossible for the United States to gain its objectives militarily in Vietnam and that any impression that North Vietnam would tire of the war was entirely false.

In other words, we are looking at the hostilities in Vietnam from our point of view, the North Vietnamese from their point of view, but we each use the same words to describe opposite conclusions. We think we are right, but we must recognize that they think they are right.

To put the situation more bluntly, but not in the terms of Vietnam, in World War I the Germans thought God was on their side and as I recall that belief was stated on their belt buckles. We were sure that God was on our side.

If one examines statements of this kind it suggests that right is not always on one side or the other. It suggests that every people have a sense of their own righteousness. It suggests to me that it helps understanding to walk a mile in the other man's moccasins.

If the United States is to survive as a great power, if we are to be the first nation ever to rise and not to fall, then it is incumbent upon us to break the cycle which has affected every great power that has preceded us in the center of the world stage.

"Surely one of the marks of the educated man or woman is recognition that there are facts, and there are facts."

This means that not only must we think we are different than other great powers have been, but we must in fact be and act differently than those other great powers which have soon fallen from their positions of influence.

At the moment I believe we as a nation think we are different than the great powers of the past, but I am not sure that the evidence thus far supports that conclusion. Certainly we think we are a nation of peace, but there seems to be a good deal of doubt even among our friends and allies that this is the case. Certainly we think we are a nation concerned and active in the solution of our domestic problems, but I suspect that some of our friends doubt this is the case.

It was a character in one of Carl Sandburg's books who remarked: "I don't know much and, come to think about it, what I do know ain't so."

You will find in the years ahead a growing temptation to fudge difficult decisions by stating that you don't have the facts. How many times have you heard people say something like: Since I don't have the facts, all I can do is to support the President; or the Governor; or the corporation President?

Surely one of the marks of the educated man or woman is recognition that there are facts, and there are facts. In the fields of pure science you may be able to predict that apples invariably fall to the earth, or that a hot poker will burn. But in the field of the social sciences what we often call facts become a little fuzzy. If the falling apple hits a man on the head he may eat it or heave it in anger through a window. While we may know that a hot poker will burn a man, it doesn't always make him jump.

A recent article by a high official of the Department of State in the magazine "Foreign Affairs" describes the difference between the "facts of foreign policy" and "defense facts." "Defense facts" lend themselves to some degree of mathematical certainty and computerization. But the State Department, according to the author, consists in part of specialists "just specialized enough to know how fruitless it is to try to run Chinese Communist intentions through the computers, or to try to quantify what is going on in Buddhist pagodas or to extrapolate the psyche of Fidel Castro."

In an unusual burst of candor, the official then confesses: "We (in the Department of State) are paid to make educated guesses . . . It is not very systematic, as systems-analysis goes."

As conscientious, concerned citizens in a democracy you will be called upon time after time to make "educated guesses" and this, unfortunately, is precisely what policy makers are often required to do. They do not know as a fact that stepped up bombing of North Vietnam will bring the other side to the conference table. Bombing might have just the opposite effect. I think it would on us.

The reason we are not able to state it as a "fact" is that we are dealing with people who are a most unpredictable conglomeration of chemical elements. Thus when one deals with so-called "facts" in the realm of social relationships he treads on very dangerous ground indeed. Facts are often significant only as they relate to other facts, and that relationship often depends upon who puts the facts together. And then just to complicate the process a bit more, it may not be the facts that are important, but what one believes the facts to be.

It is a responsibility of the educated man to do the best he can to acquire facts in the social field, but then to recognize that the crucial element to be applied before a decision is made, is judgment.

Reputable, reliable, conscientious and patriotic Americans believe a victory in Vietnam is essential to the national interest of the United States and that we must use every means at our disposal to assure that victory as soon as possible. But equally reputable and patriotic individuals believe pursuit of a course to assure total victory would be disastrous to the national interest of the United States.

I would only say that every educated man should realize that proponents of either course are not infallible. Whether an individual is a conscientious hawk or a conscientious dove, his estimate of the course of action which will best serve the interests of the United States is predicated upon predictions or estimates of how other people and other nations will react to victory, or to withdrawal, or to stalemate, and how other nations will change in the future.

History shows that the only certainty in the future is uncertainty.

In conclusion and in summary, let me recapitulate my main points: First, no matter how smart we think we are, the chances are we were not smart enough to choose our religion, our politics, or our ideology. We acquired these things at birth and some may die for them in the end.

" . . . the toughest questions we can ask relate to the eminent position of the U.S.; how it got that way; is it good that it stay so eminent; and, if so, how?"

Second, as intelligent beings we have a duty to ask questions about our society — its religions, its politics, its economics, its ideology.

Third, the toughest questions we can ask relate to the eminent position of the United States; how it got that way; is it good that it stay so eminent; and, if so, how?

And finally, as products of one of the best educational systems of this nation, we have a duty not to lapse into the clichés of know-nothingism. Facts are important, but judgment is crucial.

This nation is what it is not because of such facts as its resources of water or coal or iron. The nation is what it is because of thousands of judgments of educated Americans spread over 190 years of history as a nation. This is the process you must continue.

FIVE RECEIVE 1967 ALUMNI CITATION AWARDS ON FOUNDERS' DAY, JAN. 19

FRANK J. HEALY, B.A., '44; LL.B., '47

A brilliant attorney, who lost his sight after a high school football injury, Mr. Healy has served as Oregon State Corporation Commissioner since 1954.

As a college student he distinguished himself and was graduated from both the Colleges of Liberal Arts and Law with scholastic honors. He practiced law briefly in Salem and taught a course in wills at the College of Law before taking a position in the corporation department.

Mr. Healy was chief security examiner at the time of the appointment to his present position by Governor Patterson who said: "The character of Mr. Healy's work in the department and his familiarity with the duties and responsibilities under the department make him exceptionally qualified for the position."

Mr. Healy's outstanding abilities have been recognized by the North American Securities Administrators. He has served on both the board and as president of this professional organization whose membership represents all states, Mexico and several Canadian Provinces.

GEORGE RHOTEN, LL.B., '27

Extensive community activities have complemented Mr. Rhoten's 39 years as a distinguished Salem attorney. The one-time president of the Oregon State Bar Association has been active in the Lion's Club for 38 years (former president); the YMCA board; the Cascade Boy Scout Council; Salvation Army; the Methodist Church; the Salem Art Association; and he's a Past Master of Masonic Lodge No. 4.

Professionally, Mr. Rhoten has served as Oregon's representative to the Western States' Bar Association for many years; he's been a member of the Doctor's and Lawyer's Committee and the Judiciary Committee of the Oregon Bar; he served one term as a Circuit Judge pro-tem; and he has lectured at Willamette's law school.

A former member of the Willamette Board of Trustees, Mr. Rhoten is the senior member of the Rhoten, Rhoten and Speerstra law firm.

RUTH HILL VIGUERS, B.A., '24

The presence of an ever increasing number of excellent children's books is due in part to the outstanding work of Mrs. Viguers. For the past nine years she has served as editor of The Horn Book Magazine, a publication recognized as an authority on children's books and for its competent reviews.

Her life-long work as a librarian, teacher and author was recognized when she was delegated to the golden anniversary White House conference on children and youth in 1960.

Following graduation from Willamette, Mrs. Viguers earned a degree in library science at the University of Washington in 1926. In the next ten years her library work was to take her to the American Library in Paris; the International Institute for Girls in Madrid, Spain; and as an instructor at the Boone Library School in Wuchang, China.

She lectured at Simmons College (Boston) for 16 years and has held lectureships at the New York Public Library, New England Library Association and the Detroit Public Library. The mother of three daughters, she has co-authored two books and written a third.

TAUL WATANABE, B.A., '41

Few men have attained the respect as leaders in business and community service as has Taul Watanabe. President and Chairman of the Board of the Civic National Bank of Los Angeles, Mr. Watanabe has served as president or board member of five other institutions in the banking and finance field.

His participation in community activities includes: President of the Los Angeles City Human Relation Commission, Chairman of the Los Angeles Harbor Design Control Board, member of the Los Angeles City Cabinet to the Mayor, member of the Advisory Council of U.S. Small Businessman Administration, and Chairman of United Nations Week of Los Angeles.

Willamette's Citation award will be added to his list that includes: a citation by the Japanese Government (Premier Kishi) in 1957 for chairing the First International Businessman's Convention held in Tokyo; the 9th Class Cluster Award from the Japanese Government for promotion of better relations between the U.S. and Japan in 1960; and citations by both the Los Angeles Herald Examiner and the former Daily Mirror newspapers.

EVERETT E. WILCOX, B.A., '41

A primary purpose of Willamette University is to prepare men and women to serve their fellow citizens. The career of Dr. Wilcox, who is currently Superintendent of the California School for the Blind, is an excellent example of such purpose.

This distinguished educator has served as Superintendent, Illinois Braille and Sight Saving School; Educational Consultant, American Foundation for Blind, New York City; and as Superintendent at the Oregon State School for the Blind. He has been a member of the Boards of Directors of both the American Association of Instructors for the Blind and the National Braille Club.

In 1958 he earned his Ed.D. degree at the University of Oregon and he has had several professional articles published. Recognized as a leader in his profession, he is a consultant for the Bureau of Research, U.S. Office of Education and the Advisory Committee on Teacher Training for Visually Handicapped Children and Youth.
