VOLUME IX, No. 3

Winter 1962

OUR COVER

This year completes twenty years of distinguished leadership as President of Willamette for G. Herbert Smith. The two students visiting with him on the quadrangle ably symbolize the over 6,000 young men and women who have attended Willamette during Dr. Smith's record term of service.

We wanted to share with you the story of these past two decades at Willamette, but the modesty of the man and our own realization that the greatness of any institution can never be the credit of a single individual, made the task seem almost impossible. For who could possess the background, perspective, and sensitivity to review accurately the institution's great development since 1942?

We feel certain you will agree that we were most fortunate to find such a man, as you read the article, "Twenty Years of Distinguished Leadership", by Dean Pollock, class of 1922.

Mr. Pollock has served the University in countless ways since his graduation. He has been an alumni-elected representative to the Board of Trustees, President of the Alumni Association during the time when the alumni support gained national recognition for its growth, and this great talent with words has given the University some of its finest admissions materials.

We are deeply indebted to this loyal son of Willamette for telling the story about one of the most significant periods in the history of a growing institution.

TWENTY YEARS OF DISTINGUISHED LEADERSHIP

The war years!

Probably no part of our national life felt the impact of war more heavily than our colleges. In 1942, just at the time when problems were becoming most acute and solutions seemed most distant, Dr. Smith arrived to assume the presidency of Willamette University.

By this time the loss of young men had seriously crippled the academic program. The class of '43 came to its graduation with only about 30 percent of its membership. The total enrollment in the College of Law was one man and two women. The plight of the small college was sharply emphasized by a member of the War Production Board, who said it was inevitable that several hundred colleges would not open the following fall and that their faculties should be seeking other jobs.

Other people in high places not only expressed similar views, but implied that the liberal arts college had completed its role in American education and would have no place in the post-war years. "This," said one sage generously, "does not embrace institutions primarily vocational in character." It sounded to the colleges like an ultimatum—contribute directly to the war effort, or quit. Of course there were but a few strident voices reacting to the perils of their time (which were real enough), but the temper of the nation was such that calmer words had less chance.

Under these circumstances the new president had to chart his course. Certainly Willamette was just as eager as anyone to pledge her resources to the common cause, but just as certainly she felt an obligation to preserve her own character and integrity and her faith in an educational ideal. Here was the first of many crucial tests that have marked Dr. Smith's twenty years. He began by going after a V-12 unit, which would hold his faculty together and contribute a vital service at the same time.

As war plans became more sharply defined the government found that there was a place for some colleges after all. The technical schools of the great universities were not the only places where specialized training could be found. In response to a War Department request 1100 educational institutions filed questionnaires which enabled the army and navy to select 500 schools having the necessary qualifications. Willamette was one of 160 chosen by the navy, and Dr. Smith was summoned to Columbia University for briefing on the V-12 program.

Of the 258 navy trainees assigned to Willamette, 168 were given basic training for deck officers and 90 were in pre-medical courses. The school went on, but not quite as before. Curricula were re-vamped, heavier teaching loads were assumed by a loyal faculty, and many traditional activities disappeared. The women left the campus to take over the now-deserted fraternity houses, while the floors and corridors of Lausanne became decks and gangways and co-eds gave way to boys in navy blue.

At the end of 1945, after seven semesters, V-12 passed out of the campus picture, though not without distinction and with cause for pride in a job well done.

The Readjustment

In one of the President's reports to the Board of Trustees he observed that "each college year has its own personality just as surely as any individual." No change of "personality" was more abrupt than that from war to post-war. The years of the G.I. Bill brought their own types of pressure and imposed administrative problems that gave little opportunity for creative planning, yet the post-war character of the University was taking shape and it was of the same substance as a national trend that was then emerging.

In education no change has been more apparent than the improved status of the liberal arts college. Business leaders found that technically trained men whose abilities entitled them to wider responsibilities sometimes lacked the broad basic knowledge required of them and began sending their promising young executives back to college for such seemingly irrelevant courses as history, literature and philosophy. Professional schools began to require more pre-professional work in the humanities. In 1952 all law schools on the approved list of the American Bar Association (which includes Willamette) began requiring three years of pre-law. Some leading engineering schools instituted the "three-two" plan by which a student could have three years in a selected liberal arts college, then transfer and receive two years in engineering and graduate with degrees from both institutions. Willamette now has such arrangements with Carnegie Tech, Columbia, Northwestern, Stanford and U.S.C., and with Duke in forestry.

Dr. Smith has never wavered in his staunch belief in the liberal arts concept—a fact that has been readily apparent throughout his administration. Numerous studies in this field shows that about three-fourths of all college trained men in the upper levels of business and science are the products of liberal arts colleges. In his own words, "The liberal arts institution in the United States is the most outstanding educational influence in our society. We can ill afford to lose such a leaven in the days ahead."

Looking to the years immediately ahead, Dr. Smith continued, "In the siren call to depart from our traditional moorings and purposes, we are told that if the independent liberal arts college does not take a greatly increased share of the students who will be flooding the colleges and universities in the days ahead, that the relative importance of these institutions will diminish to the place that the state-supported institutions of higher learning will completely overshadow the relatively smaller independent college. To this I would reply that if the private college is really true to its heritage and sticks steadfastly to its purpose, it will be in a position to continue to motivate students in a way that will not be possible in the mass-production universities."

"No President could have been more fortunate in the support and co-operation which has been given by this Board."

The readjustment years were fashioned to this purpose.

The Years of Growth

The material achievements of Dr. Smith's administration can be summed up in a few quick, but tremendously impressive figures. The overall budget for 1942 was $165,260; for 1961-62, $1,927,000. The campus was enlarged from 18 to 50 acres. The number of major buildings was increased from 8 to 15, representing an investment of over $5,500,000. The endowment fund has grown from less than $2,000,000 to more than $5,000,000, aiding substantially in the improvement of faculty salaries.

Statistics, however, tell a meager story. These great sums of money are not just poured out on a waiting campus. They represent prodigious effort and sacrifice by a great many people, and the job is never done. Every one of the President's annual reports to the Board of Trustees gives generous credit, and often high tribute, to those who have shared in Willamette's progress—the faculty, the legion of loyal friends and alumni. And each one closes with a word of earnest appreciation, such as this:

"The University can take great pride in the interest, the devotion and the service of all members of the Board of Trustees. No President could have been more fortunate in the support and cooperation which has been given by this Board. In the words of our great good friend, the late Charles E. McCulloch, 'It is a noble company.'"

The new campus that has flowered from these joint labors would hardly be recognized by anyone who has not seen it in the last dozen years. Even the older buildings that face the State Capitol have a new aspect because of the great improvements in campus landscaping. Beyond them decrepit Sweetland Field is no more. In its place are spacious lawns surrounded by splendid new buildings—gracious Doney Hall for women; imposing Fine Arts with its beautiful auditorium, its studios, art galleries and music rooms; and Bishop Memorial Health Center with its medical staff and excellent facilities that have already proved invaluable in guarding student health.

The new men's residences—Baxter, Mathews and Belknap—make it possible for the first time to house all men on campus. Southward across the Millrace old property has been bought up and cleared and is now being developed. This is the site of the new residences for upperclass women, Lucy Anna Lee and Emily J. York Houses. The tennis courts have been relocated here and a field provided for intramural sports.

The absorption of Sweetland Field into the building program made it necessary to develop new athletic facilities, and this was made possible by the gift of ten acres of land in nearby "Bush's Pasture". On this land we now have McCulloch Stadium, with a fine turfed gridiron, cinder track and baseball diamond.

The Progress of the Scholar

Imposing as our campus development has been, Dr. Smith reminds us that "we should constantly bear in mind that this is not an end in itself, but simply the means to permit Willamette to better serve the educational needs of succeeding generations of young people. Certainly the President is constantly mindful that the University stands or falls on the strength of its educational program and the product it produces."

This strength comes from one source—faculty. But first the faculty must be assembled. The selection of the men and women who are responsible for Willamette's improving standards is certainly among Dr. Smith's major contributions. To go a step further, good teachers attract good students, and a campus full of capable and earnest students attracts good teachers. It's a happy spiral if you can keep it from unwinding somewhere along the line; and therein lies a threat that is even now becoming serious. The number of college students is increasing at a far greater rate than the number of college teachers. The maintenance of educational excellence (i.e., capable faculty) is the number one challenge of the immediate future, and as Dr. Smith said last spring, "This is a problem that is going to get much more acute before it can possibly get better."

However, scholastic progress in recent years has been most encouraging and, despite difficulties, further advancement is being planned with confidence. One reason for this confidence is the fact that high school students of today are much better prepared for college-level work than those of ten years ago, and can therefore advance faster. The average score achieved in the College Board examinations by students entering Willamette has improved year by year. With this improved material, the faculty, through its various committees, has been able to create a more challenging educational program.

An example of this is the Honors Program which was begun in 1958 after much study and preparation. Under this plan students who are capable of carrying a heavier load are given an opportunity to extend their educational experience beyond their regular courses. The students are organized into seminar-type groups where free discussion is possible and where individual research can be shared by the group. Such a program demands a great deal of extra time from faculty and students alike, but the experience to date has been most rewarding and has had a leavening intellectual influence on the whole campus.

Another innovation is the Washington Semester plan, which sends selected students to American University in Washington, D. C., for one semester's work. In addition to their classroom work the students attend daily seminars with men in government who are intimately involved in world and national events, including congressional leaders.

For many years more than half the graduates in Liberal Arts have gone on to graduate and professional schools for advanced degrees. Their success is evidenced by the fact that graduate institutions are awarding an increasing number of valuable scholarships and fellowships to Willamette students. These have averaged about $2,000 each and have totaled above $50,000 in a single year. Among these have been many of the most highly prized awards available to college students. The College of Music has also received commendation for the high quality of its graduate students.

In assessing the academic climate at Willamette it might be well to notice that the students themselves have taken

"Beyond them decrepit Sweetland Field is no more. In its place are spacious lawns surrounded by splendid new buildings . . ."

"Good teachers attract good students . . ."

action to curtail social and extra-curricular activities. It was felt that the extra demands of campus life were reaching a point where they drained off time and energies needed for the primary purpose of the college.

The College of Law

When one looks back to the three law students of 1943 and the discouraging prospects following the war, the present standing and prestige of the law school seems incredible. Steadily growing enrollment now places Willamette second only to the University of Washington in size among all Northwestern law schools and its scholastic record places it second to none. Willamette's reputation (due to the consistently remarkable record of successful bar candidates) brings growth while enrollments decline at other Northwest schools. Students come from 73 colleges—all the way from Shantung to Geneva.

In the Moot Court contests Willamette teams have gone up to the finals in New York City each of the last three years, resulting in one national championship against the best that the nation affords.

Law school faculty and students have also instituted several publications and services that are of real value to the community, the state and to the profession. These are, the Legal Research program, Legal Handbook, Legal Aid Clinic, and the Willamette Law Journal.

The Story of the Lost Alumni

Recently, as Dr. Smith surveyed the pleasant offices of the Alumni Association in Waller Hall, he was moved to reminisce. "When I came to Willamette," he recalled, "the alumni office consisted of a shoe box with a few hundred cards." He might have added truthfully that half the addresses were obsolete. The alumni staff now files from 1500 to 2000 address changes every year. The President's energetic alumni program began to get out of the doldrums immediately. There wasn't much of a budget, but an obscure item in the records of 1942 reveals that "an alumni secretary was privately employed by the President." The work of gathering the names and records of the lost alumni continues to this day, with 6200 names now on file.

This great company is cemented and informed by the attractive and well edited Willamette Alumnus magazine, published four times a year. Although it almost seemed on her hundredth birthday that Willamette was a college without graduates, the magazine awakened the loyalty that was there, but dormant, all along; and she now stands among the top ten percent of American colleges in the percentage of alumni contributing to her financial support.

Another reminiscence concerns the election of alumni officers. These were usually nominated by a small committee (little more than a cabal) and elected by a show of several hands and no serious objections from anyone else. In the latest election, with a choice of candidates, more than 1,000 ballots were received.

The Church-College Relationship

A college that offers a liberal education and draws its students from all faiths cannot be narrowly sectarian. This does not mean that religion must be ignored. It is a significant force in the lives of most Willamette students and the religious influence is one of the factors that shape the character of the college.

During the present administration the religious life of the campus has been strengthened in several ways. Christian Resources Week brings to the campus each year some of the more outstanding Christian leaders. The University cooperates strongly with all local churches in contacting students of their own denominations. A college chaplain has been added to the faculty, who is a teacher, an individual guide and counselor, a strong proponent of the student-and-his-church relationship and an advisor to the several student religious organizations. Closer ties with the Methodist Conference have been achieved through joint planning. For example, we now have a very capable man on the faculty who devotes his time to the Methodist Town and Country Church program, which has been organized to aid the rural churches.

We Have a Team

If the implication arises from this brief history that the advance of recent years was a one-man enterprise, then Dr. Smith would be the first to enter a vigorous denial. Let us walk around this fine point and simply say that the Board of Trustees chose wisely; that the President built on a hundred-year-old foundation and that he has assembled a most effective and devoted corps of educators.

In an address to a national gathering of college executives on "The Changing Role of the College Administrator," Dr. Smith drew, in part, on his experience as a fledgling president, when he found it necessary to "supervise the maintenance staff (one man during those war years), the director of dormitories, and the operation of the book store. At one point during the first year of administration, the Professor of English called the President to inform him that the plaster had fallen off the ceiling. Since the lone maintenance man was experiencing a major problem with the college boilers at that moment, the President accepted the lesser crisis, took the broom and dustpan and cleaned up the fallen plaster."

You've come a long way since that crisis, Herb Smith, and we, the alumni, are deeply grateful for twenty years of superb leadership.

The Alumni Citation Award was established in 1957 to give recognition, before the community and the nation, to distinguished graduates for outstanding achievements and services which reflect honor upon Willamette University. Picture of Dr. Sinforoso Padilla not available.

DR. SINFOROSO PADILLA, '24

The influence of Willamette graduates has reached the far corners of the world. An eloquent example of this fact is the life of Dr. Padilla, who has had a most distinguished career in his homeland, the Philippines. He is presently Dean of the School of Education, Lyceum of the Philippines, and also Professorial Lecturer in various graduating schools, including Arrelano University, Far Eastern University and Philippine Women's University. Since World War II he has served as the Counsellor Consultant of the Vocational Rehabilitation and Education Division for the United States Veterans Administration.

He is an active churchman and received the Y.M.C.A. Gold Triangle Award for more than thirty years of service to the movement. He has been a delegate to both the Fourth and Fifth Asian Y.M.C.A. Leaders Conferences in Hong Kong and Tokyo and delegate to the Fifth Adult Asian Y.M.C.A. Leaders of the World Assembly of Youth in Colombo, Ceylon.

Few have used their talents more generously to serve their fellow men than this Willamette graduate.

VERNE BAIN, '23

One of Oregon's most distinguished educators is Verne Bain, who retired last June after fourteen years as an Assistant Superintendent at the Portland Public Schools.

Dr. Bain began his career in education in the Woodburn schools where he served as superintendent for six years. He also taught at Southern Oregon College and for nine years served as assistant superintendent with the Oregon State Department of Education.

In addition to his many professional activities, this able professor has been an active churchman and community leader. One of his great interests has been the Portland Community Child Guidance Clinic of which he has been a member of the Board of Directors.

This loyal son of Willamette exemplifies the best of those graduates who have chosen to serve the youth of Oregon through education.

GERTRUDE EAKIN, '15

A primary purpose of Willamette University is to prepare men and women to serve their fellow citizens. The life of Gertrude Eakin is an eloquent testimony of such purpose.

Her career includes seventeen years as Director of Christian Education at the Chemawa Indian School, Salem, Oregon, three years in a like position at Haskell

Indian School in Kansas, and twenty-two years as Executive Director of the Y.W.C.A. in Long Beach and Santa Cruz, California and Portland, Oregon.

She has assumed many important responsibilities in both her church and community affairs, including President of the Board of Directors of the Portland Y.M.C.A. and a member of the executive committee of the Council of Churches both in Portland and Long Beach.

In all that she has undertaken, this exemplary teacher, professional woman and leader in church and Y.W.C.A. endeavors, has demonstrated the love of God and neighbor, and Christian motivation of an extremely high order.

From the Tower

Willamette On GE College Bowl February 11

At a time of year when college football "bowl-fever" is subsiding over the country, Willamette University is preparing to enter the fray on an academic level. Willamette has received, and accepted, a bid to participate on the General Electric's "College Bowl" television program.

Their participation will occur on Sunday, February 11, 1962, at 5:30 P.M. on the CBS-TV network show.

A total of 36 students, either by petitioning or being recommended by a faculty member, competed for the final four-man team that will represent Willamette on the show.

The final four were selected from eight finalists in three competitive sessions, open to the public, on Saturday, January 6. They are Miss Marcia Ruby, an English major from Portland; William Junor, a political science major originally from Salt Lake City, Utah, but now residing with his family in Salem; Lynn Hales, a history major from Medford, and Clifford Comisky, Jr., a chemistry and philosophy major from Portland. All are seniors except Comisky who is a junior.

A series of screening and competitive eliminations (under simulated television game conditions, including individual buzzers, lights, etc.) were conducted by a faculty committee prior to the Christmas holidays to pare down to a final eight. These eight then had the vacation to "brush up" in preparation for their final competition on January 6. At this session Willamette chaplain, Rev. Calvin McConnell acted as moderator (question-asker). The committee then made their final selections.

The faculty committee included Dr. Theodore L. Shay, Head of the Political Science Department; Dr. Orcutt W. Frost, Head of the Honors Program; Maurice B. Stewart, associate professor of physics; and Dr. Cameron Paulin, Head of the Art Department. Chairman of the group was Dr. Howard W. Runkel, Head of the Speech and Drama Departments. The latter gentleman will also act as team coach and accompany the team to New York City for their appearance.

Allen Ludden, moderator of the show, has helped to build this program into one of the top television shows in the country. Its format is unique among network shows currently and it is the pioneer program in its field.

The show consists of two four-man teams from two colleges or universities competing against each other in the speed-answering of questions asked on any and all academic subjects from literature to physics (on a college level) by Ludden. The individuals on the teams are chosen for their intellectual curiosity, breadth of interest and knowledge . . . and most important of all perhaps, their rapid recall of knowledge.

The latter is so important on the air as the first correct answer is the only one to count and thereby provides a chance for further points for that team upon correctly answering a "free" question.

A team, if it continues to win, may remain on the program for a maximum of five weeks; receiving a $1500 GE Scholarship for that college or university for each win. A losing team, even for one performance, receives a $500 scholarship for their university. These scholarships may be used at the discretion of the university.

Willamette will face one of two possible opponents on February 11; DePauw University or Marquette University. Should Willamette win they would meet the University of Alabama the following Sunday evening.

(Should their opponent be DePauw, it would provide some ironic competition for Dr. G. Herbert Smith, Willamette President. It is his Alma Mater both for undergraduate and graduate degrees and as an administrator in various capacities prior to coming to Willamette.)

Sparks Honored

Lestle Sparks

Lestle (Les) Sparks will retire this coming June after 46 years as student, teacher, coach and athletic team trainer at Willamette. He is currently Professor and Head of the Physical Education Department.

Honored twice over Homecoming Weekend this past fall, Mr. Sparks was presented his Willamette athletic blanket with the addition of stars representing 14 years of tennis coaching prior to the Homecoming game with Whitman.

Later, at a special banquet in his honor, he received a wristwatch, two pieces of luggage, a Willamette jacket, a box of Comise pears, a sizeable gift certificate from Meier & Franks and some cash, in appreciation for his many years of faithful service to the University.

Summer Science Session

Willamette recently received a $47,000 grant from the National Science Foundation to finance a special graduate program during the 1962 summer session on the University's campus.

The "Summer Institute in General Science for Junior High School Teachers of Science and Mathematics" will run for six weeks . . . July 9 to August 17. The Institute will cover courses in physics, botany, zoology and mathematics.

It is specifically geared for junior high school science and mathematics teachers who have average or below average preparation in these fields; or for those who received their training so long ago that refresher courses are desirable. Up to seven semester hours of graduate credit may be obtained.

Heading the Institute as Director will be Dr. Paul M. Duell, Head of the Willamette Chemistry Department. Associate Director for the program will be Dr. Donald R. Breakey, assistant professor of biology. Other Willamette faculty members teaching for the six week session will be Dr. Chester F. Luther, Head of the Mathematics Department; Maurice B. Stewart, associate professor of physics; and Dr. Martha E. Springer, Professor of the Biology Department.

Fifty applicants will be accepted for the Institute with stipends granted for each to cover fees, food and housing (based upon the number of dependents in the family), and some travel allowance. Further information, brochures and application blanks can be obtained by writing, or calling, Dr. Duell or R. A. Wilcox, Director of Public Information, at the University.

Qualified alumni may be especially interested, or may wish to pass the information of this fine opportunity on to qualified friends.

Deadline for filing applications is February 15, 1962.

Student Milliner on Campus

A need for a gift and no money . . . these two facts confronted Elizabeth Griffith as a high school senior in the summer of 1959. Her solution . . . she made a gift.

The gift, a hat, was so admired that her mother kept it and Elizabeth had to make another one for the party gift. Elizabeth, now a freshman at Willamette University, has been in the professional hatmaking business ever since.

Her mother's hat was so admired by family friends that many ordered copies at $5 per hat. In the fall of 1959 she had her first order placed by a store, Meier & Frank Co. in Portland, for three dozen. She sold them wholesale for $3. The rising costs of business though forces her now to charge a straight $5 both wholesale and retail.

Her hats are now sold in stores up and down the west coast encompassing several in Oregon; including not only Meier & Franks, but Lipmans and the Country Store in her hometown of Lake Oswego, Oregon.

Materials for the hats include straw frames from Mexico, felt purchased wholesale in Portland and the remaining accessories (ranging from pipe cleaners to glue) at various sources. The Mexican frames (the basic hat) come in different types and sizes. She then adds the accessories which may vary from hat to hat and range from felt flowers to golf tees, combs and mirrors. The hats are classified as summer or novelty items.

Stores are now handling the hats as far east as the Carolinas and Florida and Miss Griffith has one buyer at present interested in distributing them to exclusive hat shops along the northern Atlantic seaboard. The hats sell in the stores currently anywhere from $7-12 with a possible high of $15 in some of the more exclusive shops. Her largest single order to date was for $112 for 3 1/3 dozen to Meier & Frank.

Miss Griffith is enrolled in the Willamette College of Liberal Arts taking art with an eye to a possible future in one of three fields . . . merchandising, commercial art or the designing of clothes.

Science Addition Anticipated

It was recently announced by Willamette University President, Dr. G. Herbert Smith, that University Architect James L. Payne, is in the process of finishing plans for the addition of a wing to Collins Hall, the science building.

The three-story wing would be attached to the southwest corner of Collins Hall. It is hoped that groundbreaking can be accomplished this spring and construction of the addition be begun as soon as possible.

However final authorization for the addition must await approval by the Board of Trustees at their annual mid-year meeting, later this month. At that time the Development Committee of the Board will recommend to the Board that the project be approved.

The University has been quietly seeking funds for this project for the past six months with the result that at present about half of the expected cost has been subscribed either in cash or in pledges. It is anticipated that the balance would be raised during the construction period.

The new science addition would provide the following new facilities . . . a physics laboratory; student laboratories in physics and chemistry; office-laboratories for the faculty in physics, chemistry and biology; a new natural science laboratory; new classrooms for chemistry and mathematics; and a new science library with an adjoining seminar room.

No one could anticipate in 1941, when Collins Hall was built, the tremendous growth of the science field in education brought about chiefly in recent years by the advent of the so-called "Sputnik" era. Collins Hall is currently being used by twice as many faculty members and students than the Hall was originally designed for.

Willamette senior, Miss Marcia Ruby, discusses Miss Lesley Frost's lecture with her, after the latter's recent Convocation appearance. Miss Frost is only one of several noted speakers being brought on campus this year for Convocations. Miss Frost is the daughter of famed poet, Robert Frost.

EDWARD C. WELLS HEADS NEW DIVISION AT BOEING

Edward C. Wells

Edward C. Wells ('31), Vice-President of Boeing Company and one of the world's most widely recognized aircraft designers, has been selected to head a new company division designated as the Military Aircraft Systems Division. This new division combines laboratory and developmental facilities in the Seattle area with the outstanding manufacturing capability of the company's Wichita plant and engineering talent and facilities at both locations.

Mr. Wells has spent his entire professional career with Boeing, is a Fellow in the Institute of the Aeronautical Sciences, a former president of the organization, a member of the Society of Automotive Engineers and a recipient of the Lawrence Sperry Award for contributions to aeronautical science.

At Boeing, Mr. Wells has had an active part in the design of most of the major production airplanes — the B-17 Flying Fortress, the B-29, the 377 Strato-cruiser, the C-97 Stratofighter, the B-47 Stratojet, B-52 Stratofortress and the 707-KC-135 family of civilian jet airliners and military tanker-transport. Successively, he has been chief engineer for the company; vice-president, engineering, and a member of the board of directors.

As manager of the new division, Mr. Wells will continue to operate from the Seattle offices.

JAMES C. RETTIE NAMED TO HIGH POST

James C. Rettie ('28), nationally known resources economist and long-time career Federal employee, has been named economic advisor and senior Resources Program Staff Economist for the Department of the Interior, Secretary Stewart Udall announced January 10.

Mr. Rettie will fill a new staff position to spearhead economic analysis and long-

WITH GREAT APPRECIATION

The students, the faculty and the administration of Willamette University are grateful! Since the Loyalty Fund really took root in 1957, the total amount contributed has shown a steady increase year after year. After National Fund Chairman, Stuart Compton, wrote to you about the continued need for your support of faculty salaries, THIS YEAR IS PROVING NO EXCEPTION! From all over the world, gifts of varying sizes have come to the Alumni Office. Compared to the first two months of the Fund for last year, November and December show an increase of nearly 20% both in dollars and contributors!

WHY YOUR OWN GIFT MULTIPLIES:

1. The $1,000 Challenge: During the past three years the budget for faculty salaries has received an additional $40,000 because the number of alumni giving to the Fund has increased yearly. In 1957, a loyal alumnus said he would give $1,000 for every 1% increase in the number of donors to the Fund. The challenge was based entirely on contributors and no restriction was placed on the size of the gift. This challenge has been repeated every year since.

There are approximately 53% of the alumni who did not give last year, but if they will join with those 2900 who are giving, this year's budget for faculty salaries would receive several thousand dollars more!

2. Dollar-for-Dollar Challenge: This same alumnus has presented a new challenge this year whereby he will match dollar-for-dollar any new gift received. In addition, for those who have been giving regularly, he has offered to match any increase over the amount given last year. This means any increase brings a double amount to the University.

WHAT IS THE GOAL THIS YEAR?

Willamette Alumni have set their goal — in their hearts and in their consciences — and it has been the same year after year: MORE MONEY FROM MORE PEOPLE. So for the 1962 WILLAMETTE LOYALTY FUND, which ends June 30, here's our continuing assignment:
