THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

“Weaving the Tapestry” is the theme for this annual report. I believe it helps us view the highlights of 1993-94 within the context of the unfolding history of Willamette University.

My wife is co-owner of a yarn shop in Salem. Perhaps she has influenced me to think in terms of Willamette as a tapestry in the making, a weaving of persons, visions, events, and potential.

Those of us who are a part of the Willamette University community can look back, observe, and appreciate what our predecessors have woven in the loom of time. There is no signature on the tapestry they have passed on to us, yet it bears the unique marks of those who have been involved in its weaving.

There is reason to rejoice in the rich variety of threads which are part of Willamette University's weaving:

- Threads of knowledge...as faculty members in numerous disciplines come to the institution from a variety of graduate and professional schools.

- Threads of potential...as eager, ambitious and able students seek their higher education here at Willamette.

- Threads of concern and compassion for others...as a growing number of University members seek meaningful ways to show that “Not Unto Ourselves Alone Are We Born.”

- Threads of excellence...as faculty, students and staff perform at high standards.

- Threads of vision...as community leaders draw on the diversity of thoughts, dreams, challenges, and opportunities, and develop a pattern for the growth and improvement of our common tapestry.

Willamette has many threads which are eye-catching and pleasing to others—for example, academic excellence, student-centered campus life, financial stability, a superior physical plant and strong trustee leadership. Other colleges and universities may have one or more of these. But how magnificent Willamette's tapestry is because all of these threads have been woven together, interconnected and secured into place within an increasingly beautiful work of art.

I am grateful for all of you who have added—and who continue to add—your individual threads to the institution's tapestry. I hope you will enjoy what you read and see in this Annual Report about the threads which were joined last year to the Willamette University tapestry.

WEAVING THE TAPESTRY OF TOMORROW
FROM THE THREADS OF TRADITION

A Coptic artisan working somewhere along the Nile River more than 1,400 years ago sat at a loom and created a work of art of such enduring strength and beauty that it still exists today.

Two hundred years ago, beside the Columbia River, a woman of the Clatsop tribe wove the patterns of nature into a basket for gathering berries. At the same time she created a piece of art that has lasted for generations.

Willamette is fortunate that both of these works of art have been placed in careful hands at the University. The University is not only a curator of art, but a creator as well. Willamette creates a living work of art on its loom by equipping students with the knowledge they need to go out and, in their turn, create better communities in which to live. And so the tapestry grows.

The people who spin the yarn and hold the shuttle of Willamette's loom are those who care so much about the institution that they are willing to invest their time, their talent and their resources in seeing that the work continues. Through their commitment to the students at Willamette, these people teach lessons far beyond the classroom curriculum, and make a change not only in the students who attend, but in their local community as well. Professors, alumni, donors, volunteers—all are among Willamette's artisans. Like the weaver on the Nile, they create work which will last for ages.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE YEAR

SUMMER

John Peel, professor and composer-in-residence, traveled to the Czech Republic for the recording of his composition, Diptych, with the Bohuslav Martinu Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Master of Arts in Teaching Program received approval from the University's long-range planning task force to do a feasibility study concerning the addition of an education administration licensing program.

FALL SEMESTER

Atkinson Lecturer: David McCullough, historian and author of Truman, a biography of Harry Truman.

Reunions and the the Alumni Banquet were held Homecoming Weekend instead of Commencement Weekend.

Alumni Citations were awarded to the following people:

Alice (Eastman) Simpson '61, for achievement in community service.

Mary E. Bennett '45, for achievement in education.

Dr. James B. Cuno '73, for achievement in art history.

Dr. James B. Hicks '68, for achievement in research and medicine.

The Hon. Susan M. Leeson '68 L'81, for achievement in law and education.

Lestle J. Sparks Medallion:

William H. Kilkenny '41.

Ted Ogdahl Field was dedicated. The renovated McCulloch Stadium was re-dedicated, and its Jeff Knox Memorial Locker Room was also dedicated.

The establishment of a Master of Science degree in Management of Science and Technology was announced by the Oregon Graduate Institute in cooperation with the Atkinson Graduate School of Management.

The College of Law received a $370,165 grant to establish a Clinical Law Program (see story on page 14).

Willamette University was named as one of The 100 Best Colleges for African-American Students in a book by that title. The University was praised for its small classes and caring faculty.

The Theatre Department opened its season with Terra Nova, based on the 1911-12 race by five Englishmen and five Norwegians to reach the South Pole.

Professors recognized for excellence:

Roger Hull, art—CASE (Council for the Advancement and Support of Education) 1993 Oregon Professor of the Year

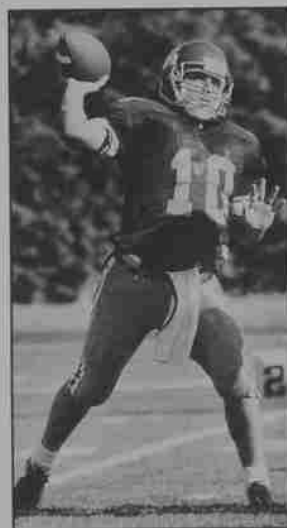

James Hanson, economics—The United Methodist Exemplary Teaching Award

Dan Montague, physics—Burlington Northern Foundation Faculty Achievement Award

Winterreise, Franz Schubert's 24 songs set to a cycle of poems by Wilhelm Müller, was performed by music faculty.

The Hallie Brown Ford Gallery presented an exhibit of 400 Mexican pre-Columbian artifacts, in conjunction with the freshman World Views curriculum focus on the culture, history and literature of Latin America.

Talks by technology advocate Ken King and technology critic Jerry Mander were sponsored by the Educational Programs Committee (EPC). The year's EPC theme was At the Global Crossroads: The Environment, Technology and the Economy in the 21st Century.

SPRING SEMESTER

Atkinson Lecturers: Author and business-economics journalist James B. Stewart, and humorist poet and columnist Judith Viorst.

The College of Law sponsored the Martin Luther King Jr. celebration organized by the Multi-Cultural Law Students Association, with Dr. Benjamin Hooks, former president of the NAACP, as guest speaker.

The National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) Division 2 defending champion men's basketball team returned to the national tournament and was among the final eight.

The only Northwest college vocal or instrumental jazz group invited to perform at the International Association of Jazz Educators conference in Boston was the Willamette Singers; only 12 such groups were invited from throughout the nation.

Willamette received the Jane McElroy-John Lewis All-Sports Award in its Conference, for the first time. Conference titles were won in volleyball, women's swimming, women's tennis and men's cross country. Teams earning co-titles were women's soccer and men's basketball.

Operation Dream: Beyond the Streets was a week-long student-organized series of events to bring attention to situations faced by the homeless.

A conference on Chicanos and Multiculturalism in the Humanities: Challenges and Opportunities explored developments that have shaped Chicano identity.

The Atkinson Graduate School of Management began celebrations of the 20th anniversary of its founding with a "Toast & Roast" of founding dean, Steve Archer.

Julius S. Scott Jr., president of Paine College in Augusta, Georgia, was Commencement speaker.

The Atkinson Graduate School of Management initiated an agreement with Aomori Public College in Aomori, Japan, to enhance international management education (see story on page 10).

TEACHING DIVERSITY ON CAMPUS AND IN THE COMMUNITY

RICH BIFFLE, ASSISTANT professor of education, sees himself as a weaver, not of yarns and fibers, but of ideas. "I'm enchanted by what weavers can do," he said, "taking various colors and textures of thread and making them into one beautiful piece of art."

Biffle likes using tapestry as an analogy for life, and in reference to multiculturalism, he prefers it over the analogies of melting pot or salad bowl. It takes the subtle differences in the thread to create the beauty of a piece of tapestry, he explains, but there is unity as well. He sees this unity as an important part of teaching people to get along together.

"In this country we tend not to talk about relationships," he said, "and when we do, we emphasize differences, not similarities. Our national pastime is putting people in boxes with labels. I'd rather investigate the similarities." Biffle is putting many of his ideas into a book entitled Weaving a Tapestry: Multicultural Education, and also uses these ideas of collaboration and unification in multicultural training both locally and nationally.

When Todd Hutton, vice president for academic administration, decided he wanted to hold a multicultural training workshop for 45 members of his staff, it was to Biffle that he looked for help. "I think that all our faculty and staff need to be sensitive to multicultural issues," Hutton said, "and it was an important enough goal to warrant this training."

What's exciting about a workshop like this, Biffle explained, is that people begin to talk to each other. Response to the workshop was extremely positive, Hutton said, and follow-ups are planned which will also involve Joyce Greiner, director of multicultural affairs and disabled student services.

Staff from learning resources, the library and other offices reporting to Hutton met for a full day and participated in several exercises to help them understand each other and, according to

Harvey was a volunteer from the Oregon Governor's School for Citizen Leadership and, along with several other teens, volunteered at homeless shelters and crisis centers during the two-week school held at Willamette.

Biffle, "look at the world through someone else's eyes."

Seeing the world through the eyes of someone who has faced discrimination was one of the most important parts of the workshop for Marti Morandi, director of the learning resource center and language resource center. "Rich's conversations about situations he had encountered made me more aware of the kinds of discrimination people face, and I don't often have to think about," she said. "And during the role-playing exercises, it was interesting to see how different people approached problem solving. My staff said it was the best workshop they had ever attended."

Learning is not synonymous with what comes out of a book, Biffle said, but it also comes from people who have lived and experienced life. The experiences he has had, both good and bad, have made him better able to serve as a facilitator and guide for others.

Through the Oregon Governor's School for Citizen Leadership, held annually on the Willamette campus, Biffle has been able to share his experience with high school students. Biffle was director of the three-year-old program in the summer of 1993.

For the three years of the program's existence, Willamette has served as a sponsor, and Biffle said both the University and Bon Appétit, which provides food service on campus, deserve high praise for their part in the program. "It's a real team approach here," he said, "and the support of faculty, staff, residence hall advisors—a lot of people who have made it work."

"OUR NATIONAL PASTIME IS PUTTING PEOPLE IN BOXES WITH LABELS.
I'D RATHER INVESTIGATE
THE SIMILARITIES."

Each year 60 high school students are chosen from all around the state and brought to campus for two weeks.

Diversity is important in the selection process, as is leadership potential. The students then go through activities which often have a profound impact on their lives. They learn important lessons about teamwork, Biffle said, and begin to function as a true community. Last year the students went to Opal Creek and while they learned about taking care of the environment, they learned about taking care of each other. "They helped each other," Biffle said, "and it became a very powerful experience." ■

THE 1993-94 year opened and closed with faculty from the Atkinson Graduate School of Management traveling to Aomori, Japan.

Their trip in May 1994 followed a similar trip from May 20 until June 5, 1993. Both times Atkinson's full-time faculty went to Aomori to participate in conferences on management issues, and to meet with Aomori faculty to discuss curriculum development and collaborative research opportunities. At both conferences Atkinson and Aomori faculty presented papers on several important issues facing management. Proceedings from the first conference have been published.

At the second conference, Willamette presented 152 Douglas fir trees to Aomori in recognition of the friendship between the two schools, and to honor the beginning of Aomori's second year. When the trees were presented, Dale Weight, dean of the Atkinson School, said, "It is our hope that the Weight also presented officials at Aomori Public College with two chrome-plated hoedads, tools used by

creating the college, since an undertaking of this size can usually only be done through the prefectural government. Campus construction cost $120 million and a $20 million endowment was established by the city and prefecture to fund the development of new and unusual (for Japan) programs. The first class of 300 students was drawn from more than 15,000 applicants from throughout Japan.

Aomori Public College is unique in Japan in the amount of support in time and money it has received from the community and its ability to attract academic talent and good students who are committed to a new, reformed style of education.

In an effort to implement one of its most fundamental goals—the internationalization of education—Aomori sought academic partners in the U.S. and Russian Far East during 1992. After a visit to the Atkinson Graduate School, a mutual agreement was finalized, and in 1993, Willamette entered into an Aomori Public College has presented Willamette with two prints of woodcuts by Shiko Mumakata, one of Japan's most well-known woodcut artists. Mumakata (1903-1985) admired the works of Van Gogh and drew heavily on Zen Buddhism and Japanese folk art. He became an outstanding original woodcut artist and one of Japan's best-loved 20th century artists. Many of Mumakata's best works are displayed in the Mumakata Museum and Garden in Aomori City. The most important aspect of the Aomori-Atkinson relationship is the creation of a framework for enhancing each school's efforts at internationalization through faculty and student exchanges, collaborative research, corporate partnerships, etc.

These exchanges are intended to raise the visibility of both Willamette University and Aomori Public College while creating immeasurable academic benefits for faculty and students. *

RESEARCH & DISCOVERY

IN 1989 with the encouragement of College of Liberal

Arts Dean Julie Ann Carson and with the aid of a $20,000 Hewlett Grant, the Undergraduate Research Grant Program was started. That first year 14 students received grants to pursue special research projects with the assistance of a faculty mentor.

Since that first year more than 70 students representing nearly every academic department on campus have participated in the program; and students have been able to explore issues and ideas that take them far beyond the classroom. Students have created films, attended music festivals, looked at rituals surrounding death, explored radioactive decay, studied art and paleobotany in places as diverse as Jordan, Bulgaria, Aspen and New York.

During the 1993-94 school year future funding for Undergraduate Research Grants was guaranteed by an endowment created from a gift made by Bill Long '89. The program has also been named in honor of Carson, who resigned as dean at the end of the 1993-94 year.

Since its inception the program has encouraged a close working relationship between faculty and students, and given students a chance to fulfill their dreams.

With the help of an undergraduate research grant, Julie Munitz '92 traveled to the Musée Condé in France in her research for information about this drawing from the Spontenburgh Collection.

Karen Filipovich used her interest in art and conserving wilderness areas to create visual representations of some of the last wilderness areas in her home state of Montana. "It's a rare gift to be granted time," said Filipovich, "and that is precisely what this program does." She also saw it as an opportunity to do some independent thinking apart from regular course work. "The process of discovery is everywhere, once the first crucial step of learning how to think independently is taken," Filipovich said.

Robert Hess, professor of art and Filipovich's faculty mentor, said that the grant was a wonderful opportunity for Filipovich to pursue something he knew she felt very strongly about. "She thinks for herself," he said, "and without this grant she might never have been able to take those ideas and use them to educate and alert other people to what is happening in our wilderness areas."

"The program allowed me a stretch of time to live in the wilderness and capture a fragment of its tremendous though threatened presence on a piece of paper," Filipovich said.

Jayne Downing-Burnette '94 used her grant to survey 33 women's shelters and domestic abuse programs in Oregon, asking them what they would like to be able to accomplish and what priorities they had for their programs. Downing-Burnette received her degree in psychology and women's studies and would someday like to have a career helping victims of domestic and sexual violence. "This experience will help me so much when I go on to graduate school," she said. "It was a wonderful opportunity; I only wish that more students could have the same opportunity that I did."

While the students benefit from receiving an undergraduate research grant, the University often benefits as well. Roger Hull, professor of art, served as a mentor for three students whose undergraduate research was very beneficial to the University.

Lisa Bridges '91 undertook the restoration and cataloging of the Paulus Collection, about 1,000 glass negatives of historical photos of Salem and Willamette University which were given to Willamette by William Paulus '58. The photos are the work of Paulus' uncles, Otto and Robert Paulus.

"Lisa was interested in museum work," Hull said, "and her project gave her excellent experience toward

DALE PETERSON

Michael Garrett was given an undergraduate research grant to create a film using his poetry as the narrative. "As a non-traditional student," he said, "I have had experience in what many refer to as the 'real world,' and I have also learned a great deal from my studies at Willamette. The greatest asset the undergraduate research program offers is the opportunity to meld these two worlds."

that goal." Hull said that her project was a learning experience for both Bridges and himself. "We learned how to clean, restore and organize these negatives," he said. "Each negative had to be carefully cleaned by hand and a system devised for both the negatives and the prints. This project was a value to both her and to Willamette."

Julie Muniz '92 was interested in learning more about a drawing which was donated to the University as part of the Sponenburgh Collection and during her undergraduate research project even traveled to the Musée Condé, Chantilly, in France, where she found and was able to examine an identical drawing. After much analysis she finally identified Willamette's drawing as being a replica of a drawing of Isabeau de Hauteville d'Odet de Coligny, wife of the Cardinal of Chatillon, and is of the school of Francois Clouet. This was an important discovery for the collection.

graph, Mary Learns to Walk, which is in the Sponenburgh Collection at Willamette, was unlocked by Chijo Takeda '92. Takeda learned that in all probability this photograph was never exhibited, but was Steichen's studio prototype from which he created prints to exhibit. On this prototype Steichen supplemented the image with hand-made marks and abrasions to suggest highlights and 'painterly' artistic passages. "This is a rather profound fact to learn about this piece," said Hull. "If Takeda's thesis is correct, the image is rare surviving evidence of Steichen's creative process."

Jennifer Butler '94 has submitted the results of her research on four flower color variants of the Clarkia amoena var. pacifica, often called the Herald-of-Summer or Farewell-to-Spring, to a scientific journal and is awaiting a review. In research conducted by Butler and Andrea Foust '94 at the Nature Conservancy Preserve at Cascade Head, they compared four different flower colors that occurred in that location to see if flower color was related to variability in morphology, polinator diversity, genetic makeup, or reproductive success. They discovered that there were differences in these traits that were linked to floral color variation.

Butler and Foust also worked as mentors for two high school students in the Apprenticeships in Science and Engineering Program as part of their grant.

"Susan Kephart was a superb advisor," Butler said. "Her enthusiasm kept us going even when we ran into trouble in the field or in the lab." Butler is now in graduate school and Faust is an intern with the National Audubon Society, working with birds and wildlife in the Corkscrew Swamp Sanctuary. Foust was also an alternate for a position at the Smithsonian National Zoo, which combined her interest in biology and art. *

CLINICAL LAW & SOCIAL JUSTICE

issue of the *Statesman
Journal*,
Salem's

daily newspaper, featured the success story of a young Salem woman named Kari Clausen. Clausen had been through foster homes, bad relationships and a bad marriage. She was on welfare with two small children and needed a lawyer to help her fight for decent child support. She also needed good advice. She was able to get both from Willamette's Clinical Law Program. Started in 1993 the program assists people like Clausen who otherwise would not be able to hire a lawyer.

Last fall the College of Law received a $370,165 grant from the U.S. Department of Education to establish a Clinical Law Program at the University. These funds were used to establish a three-credit course in civil practice integrating education and community service. The new program replaced the Willamette Legal Clinics which had been in operation since 1986. Through a contract with the State of Oregon, the old program provided legal counsel to inmates in the Oregon State Corrections system. Because cuts by Measure 5 ended the contract with the State, and because the University wanted to provide a different educational experience than was provided by the old program, the new Clinical Law Program was developed.

The new program also serves a different set of clients. Agencies which make client referrals are: Mid-Valley Women's Crisis Service Parent-Child Services for Shelter Residents, domestic violence restraining orders, spousal and child support enforcement and child custody disputes in the dissolution setting for battered women and their children; Northwest Human Services, Inc. "Homes Offering Shelter to Teens" program, domestic violence and restraining orders, emancipation, and support enforcement on behalf of youth 18 and under;

Salem Housing Authority, also for domestic violence restraining orders and child custody disputes; and Oregon Department of Justice, Civil Enforcement Division Financial Fraud Section, consumer fraud on behalf of the elderly.

Cases are taken from the above sources, each of which will make client referrals directly to the Clinic. No more than five cases are assigned to each of the students in the Clinic for the duration of the semester. Two staff attorneys, David Daniel, who is also director of the program, and Mitzi Naucier, remain responsible as attorney of record for cases in the Clinic at any given time.

This grant provides funding for the program through 1996, at which time the grant will either have to be renewed or additional funding located.

The Clinical Law Program opened 61 files last year and gave advice to 38 clients who were not formally represented. These were all people who otherwise would have gone without legal representation.

"Legal Aid can't take many of the cases we take because of their priorities," said Daniel, "for example they can't take many family law cases. The Clinical Law Program also represents people in consumer fraud cases. "The Justice Department can work on the overall problem," Daniel said, "but can't do anything to seek recovery for individual victims, most of whom are elderly."

Not just the client benefits from the program. It's a tremendous opportunity for law students as well. Sixteen third-year students each semester are able to obtain practical experience representing clients with real problems. Students in the program may do closing arguments in a jury trial, or draft documents which are filed with the court. "They are real 'hands-on' lawyers," said Daniel, "not clerks."

Dan Grinfas '94 said he appreciated the practical focus and orientation of the Clinical Law Program. "While most law school courses teach the student how to think like a lawyer," he said, "I found that the Civil Practice Clinic was one of the few courses to squarely address the question of how to be a lawyer."

Representing clients, he added, was one of the best learning experiences he had as a student. "I think the existence of the Clinic helps boost the public perception of the law school and lawyers in general," he said. Grinfas passed the July 1994 Oregon Bar examination and, while looking for a permanent job, volunteers his time with FSSW, an organization in Portland providing aid and legal advice to low income and seasonal farm workers.

In addition to helping Clausen go to court to increase her child support, Daniel said attorneys at the Clinic also encouraged her to make other positive adjustments in her life. She is now off welfare and working at a job she enjoys.

"We have set up a system of justice in this country," Daniel said, "which should be accessible to all citizens. Without projects like Willamette's Clinical Law Program, some of these cases simply would not be handled. We provide a little piece of equal access for all." *

COMMUNITY SERVICE & EDUCATION

Shannon Dutwylar used Sam/Samantha to identify major bones of the skeleton for elementary school students and to show them how the bones move.

JUST PRIOR TO OPENING DAYS 1993 THE Community Outreach Program held a week-long orientation for 16 new students interested in volunteer service. More and more faculty and students at Willamette are realizing the value and importance of community service. In 1993 four professors—Linda Heuser, sociology; Scott Hawke, biology; Ellen Eisenberg, history; and Jim Friedrich, psychology—were awarded Hewlett grants to develop a service-learning component in their curricula for the 1993-94 school year.

Linda Heuser, sociology, said the idea of community service fit right into her class on medical sociology.

"We study issues like what it means to be chronically ill," Heuser said, "so the connection is very appropriate." Students enrolled in the class had the option of choosing to do either a service learning project or a library research project. "Those students who selected the service learning project initially felt very uncomfortable," she said, "but at the end they said it was the best experience in terms of learning and being in touch with the community that they had ever had. They extended themselves in ways they didn't know they could." Students had worked at the Capitol View Health Manor with the elderly and at Hope is Vital, an HIV/AIDS awareness and education program.

"I think the community service component is extremely important," Heuser said, "and may be one of the primary vehicles by which students learn. It makes what they learn in books so real to them, and bringing their experiences back to the classroom enriches the discussion there as well."

Scott Hawke, biology, assigned his class on animal physiology to present science lessons to elementary school children. Teams of two students would go to local schools and make presentations on such topics as the bones of the skeleton, response time and genetics, from scripts they had prepared in class.

"These kids looked on the Willamette students as very special people," he said, "and they were exposed to things they knew little about and might not ever be exposed to in their curriculum."

The program was so successful with the Willamette students and with teachers and elementary school students, that in a continuation of the project, biology students at Willamette hosted a science club from Liberty Elementary in Salem.

Ellen Eisenberg, history, also saw adding a community service component to her curriculum as the ideal way to broaden the scope of her class in immigration history. "The last time I taught immigration history, I felt

During the past few years, Willamette University students, through the Community Outreach Program, have volunteered tens of thousands of hours of service to dozens of agencies in the Salem area. Students have tutored children, built and repaired homes, organized food drives, helped the homeless, taught games to children in shelters and raised money for AIDS research. Many of these students come to Oregon from across the country and around the world, but still wanted to give something of themselves to the community which, for four short years, was their home. Thanks to the dedication of these hard-working students, the University is achieving a reputation as a place of compassion and of service.

disconnected from current events," Eisenberg said. "There was a real East Coast bias with a focus on European immigration. I like to have more of a connection between history and current events, and now, here in Oregon, there are more Asian and Hispanic immigrants."

It took revamping her course to include the West Coast migrations, but Eisenberg felt it was important, and that the time some of her students spent with agencies like Mano a Mano and in bilingual classrooms was important too. Students had the option of spending 20 hours in volunteer service with a selected agency during the semester and using that experience as a primary source in a research paper exploring some issue of immigration.

"Like internships and international study, community service gets students out in the broader community and gives them a chance to see the real world," Hawke said, "and that is very important." ★

STEWARDSHIP

Willamette University's continuing strength is reflected in the University's financial statements on pages 22 and 23. The University's strong and improving financial condition is most apparent in the $142 million ending fund balance (net assets at cost), up by more than $10 million from the previous year. That growth results from a combination of fund raising success outlined elsewhere in this report and continuing excellent investment performance. For the 16th consecutive year a balanced operating budget was achieved for 1993-1994.

Among the most significant financial transactions of the year was the $12.2 million tax-exempt bond issue sold on April 21. Of that borrowing, $9.4 million was used to refinance an earlier University bond issue at a lower interest cost. The present value of those interest savings after subtracting all issuance costs is over $187,000. The remaining $2.8 million of the bond issue actually made $3.5 million more available for capital projects. This seeming financial magic resulted from Willamette's improving bond rating which allowed the University to eliminate a debt service reserve required for the earlier bond issue.

The following are additional highlights of Willamette University's 1993-1994 financial results:

- An increase of $14,096,000 in total assets at cost to $161,128,000
- An increase of $10,187,000 in total fund balances to $142,210,000
- An increase of $3,194,000 in market value of total endowed funds to $104,063,000

(Total asset and fund balance figures are conservative since the University's facilities and investments are both included at original cost, which is substantially below any estimate of market value.)

WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY

BOARD OF TRUSTEES

I am pleased to introduce this listing of donors and to express my gratitude for the substantial ways in which so many have demonstrated their support.

With a year to go in the Sesquicentennial Campaign, a number of our objectives have been met. Because of our students' growing need for financial aid, it is especially gratifying to see the original goal of $5,000,000 in additional funds for endowed scholarships exceeded by nearly 100 percent. This year saw a record amount contributed to the annual fund, $954,897, providing essential support for the operating budget.

To those who have stepped forward to meet Willamette's needs, thank you. I hope your generosity will continue and will be a model for others.

This basket, made by the Klamath Indians of southern Oregon, is one of more than 300 baskets in Willamette's collection of Native American baskets. Baskets in this collection have been given to the University by numerous donors over the years, with a majority of the baskets belonging to the Byrd Collection and the Pollaski Collection.

Since 1970 Jim Bjorkquist, professor of sociology, has been curator of this collection. Thanks to a grant from the President's Office, the collection is housed in new cabinets in Garke Hall. Bjorkquist also received a recent Hewlett grant, enabling him to photograph and re-catalog selected baskets, along with other artifacts. Bjorkquist plans to create a print catalog of about 100 baskets this year, and to put that information on CD-ROM.

The last time the basket collection was exhibited in its entirety was in 1964, when it was displayed in the Fine Arts Exhibition Hall.

DALE PETERSON

WALLER SOCIETY

The Waller Society honors individuals who contributed $1,000 to $4,999 to Willamette during the fiscal year. This society is named for Alvan F. Waller, who carried on the tradition of service and devotion begun by Jason Lee. It was Alvan Waller, as the University's agent, who bore the responsibility for developing the financial well-being of the University as it grew. He raised the funds for and supervised the construction of what is now known as Waller Hall, which was completed in 1867.

STEP SOCIETY

The Step Society commemorates the historic old step at Waller Hall, worn down over time by the feet of so many people. The society honors individuals who contributed $500 to $999 to Willamette during the fiscal year. Contributors to the Step Society provide vital support for the academic footing needed by new generations of students who cross Willamette's threshold.

Northern Arizona is the home of the Hopi Indians who wove this plaque. Called a kachina plaque, it is said to represent a kachina, one of the dancing gods of the Hopi. Kachina plaques, coiled from grasses on a bundled grass foundation, are hung in a special chamber during ceremonies held at various times throughout the year, and may also be used as a ceremonial cornmeal tray. Cornmeal is sacred to the Hopi.

Some of these ceremonies last as long as nine days. Kachina dancers wear masks as they sing and dance, representing supernatural beings called kachinas. During these ceremonies, kachinas bring gifts to the children. Kachina dolls are also given to the children and there are dozens of different dolls, each designed to represent a specific deity. The dolls are given to children to be studied and treasured as part of their religious training. The Polleski Collection.

Baskets weren't the only woven articles made by the North American Indians. Hats were especially popular among many of the Indians of the Pacific Northwest. Two of these three hats are from Willamette's Native American Collection and one is from a collection of African cultural objects donated to the University by Philip Bruce Sandlands '73.

The hat in the front with a flattened top was made by the Klamath Indians of southeastern Oregon, and is typical of hats worn in that area. It has a diameter of approximately seven inches. This hat is from The Byrd Collection.

The hat with a rounded top is more typical of the Indians of northwestern California and is also about seven inches in diameter.

The third hat is from the Hausa tribe of North Cameroun, Africa. It is in red and green, the colors of the Cameroun flag, and has a yellow top knot. It was collected by Sandlands in Africa in the 1970s.

R. A. BOOTH SOCIETY

The R. A. Booth Society was established in 1990. Members have affirmed that "not unto ourselves alone are we born" by establishing planned gifts which benefit the University. In the spirit of the society's namesake, these members will provide for future generations at Willamette University through bequests, life insurance policies, life income trusts, and life estates.

If you have named Willamette University as a beneficiary in your will or a life insurance policy, but are not listed, please let us know. We would like to express our thanks. At their requests, some members' names are not published here.

CHILDREN OF YESTERDAY,
 HEIRS OF TO-MORROW,
 WHAT ARE YOU WEAVING?
 LABOR AND SORROW?
 LOOK TO YOUR LOOMS AGAIN, FASTER AND FASTER
 FLY THE GREAT SHUTTLES
 PREPARED BY THE MASTER.
 LIFE'S IN THE LOOM, ROOM FOR IT—ROOM!

Pictured below is a bridal purkah, used in wedding ceremonies in the Swat culture of Pakistan. It is made of woven fiber attached to a wooden stick and decorated with beads, metal disks, fringe and appliqué. It is nine inches wide and about 18 inches long.

The Swat region is considered one of the most attractive areas in Pakistan. Located in the north, it is in a cul-de-sac hemmed in on all sides by mountains ranging in elevation from 6,000 to 18,000 feet. The north-south axis is defined by the Swat River which has its origins in the watersheds of Kohistan.

This region has a colorful and highly complicated history and has played host to many people, but the Swati styles seem to have been always more indigenous than eclectic. The culture of the area today is entirely Islamic.

Mark Spollenburgh, who gave this piece to Willamette, wrote: "A comparison may be drawn between Swati decoration and the meters of folk music and spoken verse. All three consist of either rhythmic devices symmetrically arranged, or of richly ornamented passages that are without beginnings or endings. This decorative abstract is in perfect harmony with the tastes of the Islamic east."

Both of these baskets were woven by Indians from southern Washington. The smaller one was woven by the Klickitats and used for picking berries. It was held around the waist by the long cord and berries were picked into this basket to be poured later into a larger storage basket.

The Klickitats, who called themselves Whash-why-pum and were called Lataxat by other tribes, believed that the cedar tree was one of the spiritual elders of their tribe, and had blessed them with the art of basketry. Most of the baskets were made from cedar roots and bark, as well as grass.

According to legend, the first people to have the great large baskets which were later made by the Klickitat were the Sasquatch or Big Foot. Legends also tell how baskets came to have designs. Long ago in the animal world, before people came, there was a brown squirrel that was taught to make baskets. To get ideas for designs she turned to nature. First a snake told her to use the diamonds on his back as a pattern; then the mountains told her to look closely at them, that they were also like a design. The grouse told her she could use his footprints along the trail for her baskets. She also took designs from the brook and the evening sky. Once covered with the beautiful designs, she dipped the basket into the Columbia River and, for the first time, it held water.

The larger, oblong basket is about one foot in length and has a geometric pattern on the body, with a design of a four-footed animal, probably a dog, along the top.

"It happened in those mysterious times when Ravens still walked among men..." So begins the story of the origins of basketry told among the Tlingit in southeastern Alaska. The larger basket in this photo was made by the Tlingit, the other two are examples of Nootka and Aleut basketry. The border of the Tlingit basket is a blanket border, copied from the blankets introduced by the Hudson Bay Company and called khoo-woo-kus-suh-yay-yee (strange or curious blanket).

The Tlingit story continues: "As the wife of the Sun sat in the Sky-land, longing to return to Earth, she idly began to plait together roots, forming them into a basket. When the Sun saw her anguish, he increased the basket's size until she and their children could fit into it. He then lowered them to Earth and their basket settled in southeastern Alaska near Yakutat on the Alsek River."

From their folk memories, the Tlingit have created this story of the origin of their baskets which are used as cooking kettles, water jars, drinking cups, family trunks, hats; and for gathering berries and storage.

Tlingit baskets are woven from the younger tougher roots of the Sitka spruce or from cedar bark.
Grasses and stems are used for the patterns which show only on the outside of the basket. Natural dyes were used to create a palette of colors with names like "red-like-the-sky-at-sunset" or "sun-red." Huckleberries and different kinds of wood and leaves were used for the reds, purples and black. Yellow was produced by steeping the weaving materials in a solution made from wolf moss, and unique blue-green used by the Tlingit was made by boiling hemlock bark with oxide of copper obtained by scraping old pieces of copper rock. When commercial dyes were first introduced, the weavers tried a riot of bold colors.

DALE PETERSON

In 1937 in the city of Shanghai, China, this Chinese jacket was purchased; later it was presented to Dorothy Flegel as a gift. Flegel, who distinguished herself as an educator for 42 years in Portland's Jefferson High School, has now given the jacket to Willamette University's Art Department. For 14 years her father, Austin F. Flegel Sr., was on the board of trustees at Willamette, and her brothers Austin Jr. '13, Earl '17, Paul '21 and her sister Marjorie '23 all attended Willamette University.

This dark blue silk coat has three embroidered medallions on the front, three on the back and one on each of the shoulders. Each medallion has a dragon and a phoenix in the center, and is surrounded by a scalloped border. On the back is a trapezoidal badge, embroidered with gold thread and sewn to the coat. A figure of a lion is in the center of the design.

Decorations on Chinese garments were of great importance, and were used to convey the importance of the occasion, as well as the rank and status of the person wearing the clothing. Color also played an important part, with imperial yellow being worn only by the emperor. Animals, real and mythical, such as dragons, phoenix, bats, lions, tigers and pheasants were used as symbols of a person's place in society.

Sources suggest that because of the scalloped border around the medallions, the jacket was probably made shortly after the turn of the century, between 1900 and 1910, just before the collapse of the Qing Dynasty. The coat has a mixture of styles and, therefore, several possible explanations for the rank of the person for whom it may have been made. It could have been made for the theatre, but the medallions and color indicate it could also have belonged to an official of high rank, possibly a censor. The meaning of many of the symbols had been diluted by the end of the dynasty; the phoenix, for example, once worn only by members of the royal family, could also have been worn by the most important woman in a family.

The world in which the Clatsop Indians lived was a stratified society, with slaves and free, rich and poor. They spoke the Chinookan language, one of the oldest languages in the region. At puberty most boys and many girls went on a vision quest as a rite of passage, seeking their spirit helper which could be animate or inanimate: otter, bear, bluejay, tree or rock.

Coastal Indians also had a rich oral literature. Of more than 10,000 oral poems, epics and tragedies that the coastal Indians were estimated to have had when the first settlers arrived, less than one-tenth were recorded.

Food was abundant around their home on the northern Oregon coast at the mouth of the Columbia River, and included salmon, elk, deer, sturgeon, steelhead, eels, and several types of berries.

Besides their permanent villages near the coast or rivers, these coastal tribes often had camps in the foothills of the mountains where they would go to pick blueberries, huckleberries, or any of the other berries of the area. Most of their dwellings were made from poles and large planks of cedar, housing from one family to several.

Baskets like the one below, along with hats, baby cradles, drinking cups, trays and clam baskets, were usually made from either spruce root or shredded hazel bark. For overweave decorations on the baskets, bear grass was often used for white, maidenhair fern stems for black or grasses dyed with alder bark for red. It was the tribes of the Chinookan family, like the Clatsop, that sometimes used animals for decoration. The animals used for the design on this basket appear to be elk. This particular basket was given to the Rev. J. L. Parrish in the early 1840s by the Clatsop Indians and presented to Willamette by his grandson, Richard D. Slater.

Willamette music professor John Doan delights audiences by taking them into a Victorian parlor and telling them stories of that bygone era. One of the items that might be found in such a parlor is this hexagonal pin cushion which was purchased by the Sponenburghs at the Chelsea Antique Fair in London, England, and is a part of the Mark and Janeth Hogue Sponenburgh Collection at Willamette.

This pin cushion dates from the second half of the 19th century, and measures about eight inches in diameter. Across the top is an intricate pattern of stringed glass beads sewn to a fabric cover.

REQUESTED MATCHING GIFTS

Many individuals are eligible to have their gifts to Willamette matched by an employer or spouse's employer. The University deeply appreciates the additional support, which increases the impact of individual gifts, as well as counting toward membership in the giving societies. The date on which a matching gift is granted may not coincide with Willamette University's fiscal year. This is a listing of donors who requested during 1993-94 that their gifts be matched; donors for whom matching funds were received during the fiscal year are denoted with a * elsewhere throughout the Annual Report.

To anyone growing up with the Saturday matinee westerns of the 1950s, Apache is one of the names most nearly synonymous with Indians. The names of the Apache tribes, like Mescalero and Chiricahua, conjure for many of that generation a celluloid image that has little to do with reality. These tribes together with those of the Great Plains which were similarly slandered in television and the movies—Cheyenne, Blackfeet, Sioux, Arapaho—form our stereotypes of Native Americans.

But there is much more to learn about the people who crafted this tray. Inhabiting southern Arizona from about 1500, the Apache spoke an Athapascan language and, although they probably practiced some farming, were primarily hunters and gatherers. In general, basketry was developed to a higher point by wandering people, because a well-woven basket could be used for many things and was not only lighter and easier to carry than a clay pot, it was unbreakable.

Apache leaders were chosen for their hunting and oratorical ability, their prowess in war, and sometimes for their wealth. The Apache lived in single-family homes called wickiups with circular rooms partially excavated into the ground. In their basketry they used the harder shoots of certain trees and shrubs like willow, sumac and cottonwood, less often than the grasses. Devil's-claw or martynia was used as the black decorative material.

This tray, which measures about 17 inches across, has the design of a coiled diamondback rattlesnake. Within the coils of the snake is the figure of a four-legged animal along with two other, smaller designs. Trays are an all-purpose vessel, serving many household and ceremonial uses, so they were made in great abundance. The Polleski Collection.

Coptic is a word usually used to refer to the Egyptian Christians who were direct descendants of the Egyptians of pharaonic times. The fragment of Coptic weaving pictured here was probably created by a Coptic artisan about 900 A.D. from what appears to be wool. The color is dark red-brown on a natural background. It is possible that the root of madder, a type of European herb, was used as the dye. In the center is a fish with two human-like figures above and below, all surrounded by plant shapes. A solid ring circles the central figures. This fish and water-plant motif was common in ancient Egyptian art, and one of the few ancient motifs to be retained by Coptic artists. This fragment is a part of the Mark and Janeth Hogue Sponenburgh Collection, as is a second Coptic piece which appears to be linen dyed with indigo. The figures on the second piece are two people whose upper bodies seem to meld together, with a centaur-like lower body.

CENTER FOR DISPUTE RESOLUTION AFFILIATES

Center for Dispute Resolution (CDR) Affiliates are leaders in their fields and visionaries who support the work of conflict theorists. Affiliates keep the CDR program personnel informed about issues and new developments in dispute resolution practice and submit disputes as raw materials for academic discussion. Affiliates provide financial support to the CDR program and are included as principal guests at every CDR event. The founding year for the CDR Affiliates Program was 1993-94.

THANK YOU

Willamette University is grateful to the donors who have made contributions during the 1993-94 fiscal year.

Matching gifts from employers have been included when determining the appropriate giving society memberships. Titles have been omitted wherever possible to save space.

If you are a donor, but your name does not appear in the 1993-94 President's Report, one of two things may have happened:

1) in the process of generating the annual report lists, your name was inadvertently excluded; or

2) your gift may have been received in our office after our fiscal year ended May 31, 1994.

Inquiries or requests for further information should be directed to:

Chris Mildner, Director of Donor Relations,
Willamette University, 900 State Street, Salem, OR 97301, (503) 370-6340.

GARY BRAASCH

PAINTED ON OUR TAPESTRY
WE SEE THE WAY IT HAS TO BE,
WEAVING THROUGH THE LAUGHTER AND THE TEARS;
BUT LOVE WILL BE A TIE THAT BINDS US TO THE TIME WE LEAVE BEHIND US;
MEMORIES WILL BE OUR SOUVENIRS.

Pray for Me
