For Future Generations

Jerry E. Hudson has been president of Willamette University since August 1980. He began the 1989-90 academic year refreshed from a sabbatical. Under his leadership, the University launched into its sesquicentennial era with a renewed commitment to honor its history by continuing the tradition of providing for future generations. This Annual Report is President Hudson's accounting to you, the trustees, alumni, donors, staff and other friends of Willamette. It encompasses the year from June 1, 1989, through May 30, 1990, for the College of Liberal Arts, the College of Law and the Atkinson Graduate School of Management which together constitute the University.

Carrying on the Tradition of Vision and Dedication

"I realize that great institutions like Willamette begin on a vacant lot... that our founders created an institution for people they would never meet, planted trees they would never sit under and built buildings they would never visit."
—California Assemblyman Sam Farr '63 upon receiving an Alumni Citation in 1989.

Willamette University has always been the beneficiary of people with vision and dedication. The University's success and well-being are the product of such vision and dedication.

The year 1989-90 was one which reminded the Willamette community of its rich heritage. The year reminded us that the University advances as a result of visionary people—men and women like the early Methodist pioneers who used their imagination and saw beyond the present situation to new possibilities; creative and innovative individuals who thought in terms of potential, expected to improve the status quo (as good as it might have been), and inspired others to turn dreams into reality.

The year also reminded us that the University advances as a result of dedicated people—individuals like Alvan Waller who refused a $700 annual salary (for his work as construction supervisor and fund raiser for the building that would later bear his name) by declaring, "I am working for future generations."

Waller Hall Rededication

The ultimate reminder of Willamette's heritage was the rededication of Waller Hall on October 20, 1989 (122 years after its original dedication). This historic event also marked the beginning of the University's sesquicentennial era, as Willamette prepares for its 150th anniversary in 1992.

Rededicating the University's "old historic temple" provided a reason to celebrate more than the magnificent results of a one-year renovation project. In a very real way, it gave each of us—faculty, staff, students and the many donors who made the renovation possible—an opportunity to reaffirm the ideals behind the building and the University, and to renew our own dedication to the vision of Alvan Waller and our other founders.

Waller Hall is a monument to the tradition of vision and dedication at Willamette, a tradition that we in this generation are nurturing and carrying on for future generations.

A Year of Outstanding Achievements

Space does not permit chronicling all of the Willamette community's major events and achievements during 1989-90. These pages illustrate some of the accomplishments; more complete profiles of a few students and faculty members plus one special new project, undergraduate research grants, begin on page 6. Among the year's noteworthy items were:

- Dedication of the Tokyo International University of America campus
- New programs and curriculum changes
- Campus visitors
- Athletic successes

Tokyo International University of America

Tokyo International University of America (TIUA) was dedicated in September, at the beginning of its second semester of operation in Salem.

The TIUA campus, connected to Willamette by a friendship bridge across 12th Street, as well as by a 25-year sister school relationship, is an example of what can be accomplished by people of vision and dedication. In 1965, then-President G. Herbert Smith and his counterpart at Tokyo International University, Dr. Taizo Kaneko, shared a dream and initiated the mutually beneficial relationship which has enabled students from Willamette and from Japan to experience one another's cultures through exchange programs. The new TIUA campus further enhances Willamette's international education programs.

New Programs and Curriculum Changes

In the realm of new programs and curriculum changes, 15 students enrolled in Willamette's Master of Arts in Teaching (MAT) program, after a pilot project with three students the year before. Six distinguished visitors assisted the Atkinson School faculty with a curriculum revision, undertaken to adapt to changes in management practices. The Center for Dispute Resolution continued to provide law students, as well as special certificate students, with tools for resolving some disputes with alternatives to litigation.

We were able to renew our commitment to assisting both students and faculty in obtaining grants to pursue research. Willamette's new Undergraduate Research Grants Program was implemented with great success, as highlighted on pages 6 & 7. A new position, director of academic grants and awards, was created—and filled by an alumna, Pat Alley '73. She serves faculty of all three colleges by alerting them to grant possibilities and assisting in writing and editing proposals. She also assists students in competing for national scholarships and awards.

In our efforts to provide technological support for teaching, an instructional technology planning committee worked to develop plans for using computers, television and information processing. A satellite dish was installed, facilitating teleconference reception and availability of educational and foreign language television.

Campus Visitors

Visiting professors and scholars provided expertise in varied areas during the year. A spring theatre production of Euripides' Iphigenia was translated by Robert Meagher, a visiting scholar. At the Atkinson School, Yoshio Uchida, executive director of the Information Technology Promotion Agency of Japan, presented seminars and discussions. At the College of Law, Professor Zhizhong Liu of Xiamen University spent the year in residence. He is a professor of international law with special interest in comparative law and international business transactions.

Through the Atkinson lecture series, Edward Albee, playwright; Jane Bryant Quinn, economist and nationally syndicated writer; and Stephen Jay Gould, paleontologist and evolutionary theorist, spoke on campus. The Educational Programs Committee, which enables students to work with faculty and administrators to invite and host a series of speakers, chose the theme Controversy. Speakers included Philip Agee, former CIA agent; Frank Susman, noted attorney who argued the Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services case before the Supreme Court; and Lou Gold, advocate for the ancient forests of the Northwest. The Second Tuesday series, sponsored by the Alumni Association, provided an opportunity to hear faculty presentations in an informal setting. Convocations, scheduled by the chaplain's office, continued to provide thought-provoking perspectives on diverse topics which included the Soviet economy, freedom in China, myth and imagination, and women and ecology.

Athletic Success

It was a year which brought athletic successes. The men's basketball team tied for the Northwest Conference title, finally losing in overtime in the NAIA District II finals. The women's soccer team won both Northwest Conference and NAIA District 2 championships. The men's tennis team won the NAIA District 2 championship, and the men's swimming team won the Northwest Conference. Fourteen Willamette students were named NAIA All-Americans and nine earned Scholar-Athlete honors. Carrie Pietig set a national record in the discus and won two NAIA national championships. In May, Charles Bowles, track and cross country coach and professor who was retiring after 25 years of service to Willamette, was recognized with the dedication of the Charles Bowles Track.

Providing for Future Generations

The accomplishments of the year 1989-90 encourage satisfaction with the status quo—Willamette University is a very good institution today. But we must always have the vision and dedication to seek further improvements so that our institution will be even better tomorrow, carrying on Alvan Waller's tradition of working for future generations.

When Willamette prepares for its 200th anniversary in 2042, I hope it will be said that we today did our part in charting a successful course, that we paid our debt to those who came before us and that we left a vision that those who follow us gladly sought to turn into reality.

Undergraduate Research Grants Program Initiated

Implementation of a grant program to encourage research by undergraduates was a proud accomplishment of the College of Liberal Arts this year.

These grants enable students to participate in the quest for expansion of the existing body of knowledge, a quest that ties past, present and future generations together. In addition to preparing undergraduate students for graduate study, these grants increase the opportunity for professors to broaden their educational relationships with students.

Fourteen students received grants in the first round of awards and pursued their investigation and experimentation during the summer and/or academic year 1989-90. Thirteen students were awarded grants during the second round in the spring of 1990.

Lisa Bridges' summer project not only helped prepare her for a future career, it also put her in touch with Willamette's past.

Bridges '91, an art major who received an undergraduate research grant to conduct this project, is restoring more than 900 glass plate negatives donated to the University by the Fred Paulus family.

"I thought this would be good experience and help me toward my career goals," Bridges said. "I would like eventually to work as a curator in a museum, and this should give me good background."

The negatives, many of which are more than 70 years old, contain historical photos of campus life in the early part of this century.

"There are early pictures of Freshman Glee and May Day," she said. "I've learned a lot about Willamette and gained some insight into a possible career."

The Middle East was the subject of research by several students. Cinda St. John '92, a humanities major, spent a summer searching for Farsi and Arabic texts here and in California libraries; Haifa Bint-Kadi '90, English and speech major, produced a

St. John worked on her project for approximately one year, compiling research for a book on Iran which is being written by Professor John Lorentz.

Today's Generation: Students

Alvan Waller would be proud of the honors, achievements and activities of today's Willamette students, as one of the future generations for which he was working. David Bloom and John Rehm, for example, were the only students at Oregon colleges to be recognized in USA Today's All USA Academic Competition. Kathy Gorospe, a third-year law student, participated in an Indian Law Symposium at Harvard Law School, moderating a panel on removal of cultural artifacts from Indian burial grounds. Law students participated in Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA), a nationwide program sponsored by the American Bar Association and the IRS, to assist low income, elderly, handicapped and non-English speaking persons. Joe Neffert M'90 was the 15th Atkinson School student selected in 11 years as a Presidential Management Intern. A Fulbright fellowship allowed Jean Abshire '89 to spend the year studying and doing research in Germany. For the second year in a row, one of 10 General Motors Liberal Arts Excellence Awards given nationally went to a Willamette University student. Kim Coghlan '92 received the award, as did Greg Mulhauser '91 the prior year. Six of Willamette's many outstanding students are profiled here.

Barry Bartel

Barry Bartel chose law in general and Willamette University in particular because of his interest in helping others through negotiation and conflict resolution.

Bartel, a third year law student who ranks third in his class of 150, said he planned to attend law school as a high school student. However, by the time he graduated from college, he had decided to do international work.

"I abandoned the idea of going to law school," he said. "I thought there were better ways to help people."

After graduating summa cum laude from Bethel College in North Newton, Kansas, Bartel and his wife Brenda spent three years in Haiti coordinating a rural project through his church that emphasized agriculture and health skills.

"When I returned from Haiti, I knew I wanted to return to school to learn more about conflict management," he said. "I looked into seminary programs, peace studies programs, and sociology programs. Then I looked into law schools and dispute resolution."

Bartel said he hopes he can use his training to help people who couldn't otherwise afford legal assistance, and to find alternatives to litigation.

While at Willamette he has won numerous awards, including the Trustees' Merit Scholarship and a place all four semesters on the Dean's List.

Bartel has also participated in the Negotiation and Client Counseling Moot Court competitions, and his article, Tort Law and the Safety Belt Defense: Analysis and Recent Oregon Developments was published in the Willamette Law Review.

Currently Bartel works as editor-in-chief of the Willamette Law Review, and also works as a law clerk for the Salem law firm of Clark, Lindauer, McClinton, Krueger, Fetherston & Edmonds.

After graduation from the College of Law, Bartel plans to work as a law clerk for Justice Richard Unis of the Oregon Supreme Court.

When not studying or working, Bartel said he likes to spend time with his wife and two-year-old son, Jordan. He also enjoys camping, hiking, basketball, volleyball, racquetball, skiing, and he is fluent in Haitian Creole.

Kim Coghlan

Kim Coghlan '92 believes in community involvement. In the two years she has been at Willamette, Coghlan has distinguished herself in public service.

During her freshman year, she was named to the University's sesquicentennial planning committee. She now co-chairs the student sesquicentennial committee.

"I have a personal reason to involve myself in planning the sesquicentennial," she said. "1992 is the year I graduate and I wanted to do everything I could to see that it is a great year. It was also a good way to get involved during my freshman year."

It doesn't seem that getting involved has ever been a problem for Coghlan, who comes from Spokane, Washington. She serves on an ad-hoc committee planning the World Views curriculum; the Parking Review Board; Campus Ambassadors, a Bible study group; she is co-coordinator of Alcohol Consumption Education; has served on a faculty search committee, the University Center Advisory Committee, and the Pi Beta Phi sorority publications committee; and, along with other members of her sorority, held a Christmas party last year for foster children.

Coghlan was recognized as the Outstanding Freshman in 1989, and that same year as an Outstanding College Student of America. She has received a Residence Life Scholarship, as well as the General Motors Liberal Arts Excellence Award.

Coghlan said she would like to be a college professor of Spanish literature eventually.

"Marta Velez was a wonderful professor of Spanish and she was very inspirational to me," Coghlan said. "While in her class I just fell in love with Spanish literature."

David Martinez

When David Martinez '90 received his bachelor's degree in May, his family was here to watch. Parents, brothers, sisters, nieces, nephews, aunts and uncles came to congratulate him as he received his degree.

Martinez, who received the Daniel H. Schulze Award, the Colonel Percy Willis Prize, and the Jessie E. West Award, was the first member of his immediate family to graduate from college. He had also been the first to graduate from high school.

"It was the best graduation possible," Martinez said. "My family has been my main motivation."

Martinez said it was important to him to acknowledge the part his parents have played in his success. "They have supported everything I have wanted to do," he said, "and they always wanted me to get an education."

A sociology major with a minor in Spanish, Martinez said he wants to work in migrant education.

"I want to provide a good role model for Hispanic youth," he said. "They need to know they have options besides working in the fields." Martinez said he had worked in the fields and knew how difficult it is for children of farmworkers to break out of that mold.

Martinez is working as a resident director at Willamette and looking for work with the Salem-Keizer school district. On campus he has been active in the intercultural student organization; Unidos Por Fin, a Hispanic group; as an Opening Days staff member and resident assistant; and he has served on the Educational Programs Committee. He served internships with the Oregon Commission on Hispanic Affairs, translating for Mano a Mano, a support group for migrant workers, and with Marion County Mental Health, working with the Hispanic population.

He hopes his younger brothers and sisters will follow his example to further their education.

"They have seen me do it," he said, "and they know it is possible."

Greg Mulhauser

Greg Mulhauser '91 gave up appointments to three U. S. military academies and brought his talents to Willamette University instead.

Mulhauser said he planned to attend a service academy until the middle of his senior year in high school, about the time he completed the application process. He was accepted at West Point, the Naval Academy, and the Coast Guard Academy; but by that time he had changed his mind.

"I wanted to develop as my own person," Mulhauser said, "and the military wants to make you a new person to fill their needs."

Appointments to service academies require a lengthy and highly competitive process and appointment to one is an achievement. Appointment to three is highly unusual.

An exceptional student, Mulhauser came to Willamette as a National Merit Scholar and recipient of a National Elks Foundation Scholarship. In the past three years, he has received numerous awards and scholarships, which include: a Pepsi-Cola Corporation Residence Life scholarship, the General Motors Liberal Arts Excellence Award, the Barry Goldwater Scholarship, a Willamette Undergraduate Research Grant, a National Endowment for the Humanities Grant for philosophy and math, and third place in a national essay contest sponsored by The Foundation for Economic Education, Inc.

Mulhauser has a dual major in philosophy and math; an unusual combination, he admits. Philosophy was chosen, he said, to help him establish a way of looking at life, and math because of a keen interest in the chaos theory.

His first two years at Willamette, Mulhauser was active in campus politics, serving on the student senate and various committees. Now he is active in environmental issues and enjoys hiking, fencing and mountain biking.

Plans for the future are open, he said, but his strongest inclination is to attend graduate school, majoring in philosophy. Mulhauser would like to attend Oxford or Cambridge in England, but is also interested in Cornell or Princeton.

"I want to attend a small university in a small town," said Mulhauser, who is from Whitefish, Montana, "so I can get away for hiking and relaxation."

Carrie Pietig

Carrie Pietig '91 was the shining star of Willamette's 1990 track season, setting a national record in the discus and winning two NAIA national championships at Tarleton State University in Stephenville, Texas.

Pietig won the shot put with a toss of 48'11 3/4" and set a national discus record of 167'4". With her victory at the national meet, she became Willamette's first woman individual national champion and first NAIA winner overall since 1982. She was the Bearcats' first national champion in track since 1966.

Pietig began her track career at Centralia High School in Centralia, Washington, where she also played basketball and volleyball.

"I began as a sprinter my freshman year," she said, "and in my sophomore year I found out I could throw the shot and discus pretty well. Then the sprinting ended after a knee injury."

Pietig works 20 to 25 hours a week as a student manager at Marriott Food Service and also as a computer graphic artist at the Learning Resources Center. During the spring she cuts back her hours in order to train, however.

Sports aren't Pietig's only interest. She also enjoys reading, crafts, art and working on a computer. A business economics major with a studio art minor, she hopes one day to be a computer artist.

Traveling to China is another of her goals.

"I went for 10 days on a sports exchange in high school," she said, "and I'd like to go back with more time to learn about the culture." Pietig said she had considered going for a semester abroad while attending Willamette, but track was very important to her and she didn't want to give that up.

Linda Smith

In May, Oregon Business magazine selected Linda Smith, 1990 Atkinson School graduate, as one of the top 10 business students in Oregon.

For three years Oregon Business has been honoring top business students, basing their choice on grade point average, community service, extra-curricular activities, and job experience.

Smith, who graduated first in her class with a 3.94 g.p.a., was involved in several projects while attending the Atkinson School, and also busy trying to balance work, family and school.

She is now a financial analyst with Hewlett-Packard's medical productions division in McMinnville, and serves as a liaison with product development.

"It's certain I could never have gotten this job without the training I received at the Atkinson School," Smith said.

Smith was working part-time as a medical technologist when she decided to go to graduate school.

"The lab work I was doing was pretty automated," she said, "and I wasn't working full-time. We had just moved to the Salem area and my children were getting a little older; it just seemed like the right time."

Smith said she was very dedicated to doing well in school. "I was also asking my family to go through this with me, so I wanted to get all I could out of it."

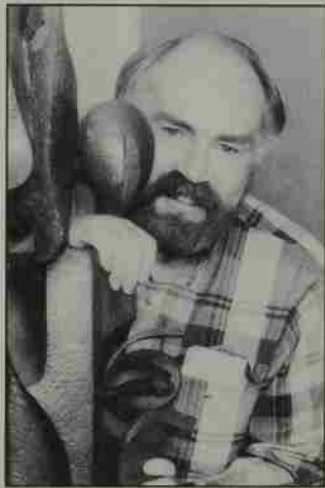

While attending the Atkinson School, Smith worked as a teaching assistant to help pay for school. As the mother of two children, she was taking care of her family while working and attending school.

"If it's worth doing," she said, "I try to excel at it. I want to be the best I can be. I had to be very organized, but I enjoyed it."

Additionally, Smith worked as a summer intern for Willamette Industries, setting up an affirmative action program, and conducted a feasibility study for Willamette University to develop a child-care program on campus.

Excellence in Teaching

The very act of teaching implies faith in future generations. Willamette University is proud of the quality of its teaching. Willamette values and respects scholarship among its faculty, but seeks first those who are expected to be excellent teachers and mentors for students. Many, such as Mike Hand, professor of statistics and computing at the Atkinson School, excel in both research and teaching. He is engaged in applied research, funded by Oregon's Advanced Computing Institute, to develop economic modeling tools for parallel computers. The strengths and achievements of our faculty as a whole are exemplified by the four members profiled here.

Robert Hess

Robert Hess isn't quick to talk about himself. He would rather talk about art—creating it and teaching it.

"It's too bad we don't have students long enough to teach them when to step back and remove themselves from their art," he said. "We teach them to put themselves into their art, but there comes a time when they have to get out of it and let the work be itself and hold its own, independent of the artist. What's happening is that a certain logic has been set into motion and it is important that it play itself out. What it all comes down to is to make an art work honestly worth seeing."

Hess illustrates this point using one of his own works, Aegean Angel, a hammered and welded bronze sculpture that was created in 1989 in memory of his father, Herman Hess.

"The figure turned out austere," he said, "and my father was not austere. He was very playful, and the sculpture was supposed to reflect that."

The work soon took on a life of its own, he said. "Art becomes its own thing and you can't force it to be something it doesn't want to be."

Aegean Angel was never quite meant to be shown, but was a way for Hess to work through the death of his father, he said. "I did it because I needed to do it."

However, the piece will be part of an exhibit in November of Hess' work at the Hallie Brown Ford Gallery.

Other works which will be shown at that time include new drawings and paintings with oil crayons made while driving in Holland during his sabbatical. Drawings of Italy are included in a notebook also on display.

Hess has been at Willamette since 1972, teaching courses in sculpture, structural design, metalsmithing, and drawing. In September 1989, he was awarded Willamette University's Burlington Northern Foundation Faculty Achievement Award.

Other awards Hess has won include: an Atkinson Foundation Grant to study Renaissance art in Italy for the spring of 1990; two "Best of Show" awards in Beaverton Arts Commission Exhibitions; and first place award in the All Oregon Art Exhibition in 1983.

On sabbatical during spring 1990, Hess had the opportunity to travel to Italy to study the art of the Renaissance. He viewed the work of masters like daVinci, Michelangelo, Botticelli, Raphael and Giotto.

"We are now too much accustomed to looking at art through picture books and slides instead of the actual works themselves," he said. "Experiencing Giotto, for instance—let alone Michelangelo—has little to do with looking at pictures of their works."

Hess received a master of fine arts degree from the University of Notre Dame and a bachelor of fine arts degree from Indiana University.

Susan Kephart

Along the north side of Sparks Center is the Martha Springer Botanical Garden, a quiet area overlooking Mill Stream filled with a variety of flowers and other plants. The garden is designed as a space for leisure and learning, with theme beds mixed among more traditional plantings and descriptive labels that add educational value.

"It's a concept I had thought about since 1981 when I left Michigan State University. They had wonderful botanical gardens there," said Susan Kephart, who helped make the garden a reality.

With the help of many dedicated students and input from faculty, staff, and the Salem community, the garden was dedicated in 1988 in honor of an emeritus faculty member in biology.

The garden reflects Kephart's special appreciation for native plants. She has taught several Elderhostel classes on the wildflowers of the Cascades and is a member of the Native Plant Society of Oregon. She is working with the Bureau of Land Management in Salem, designing a monitoring system for field checking rare plants. She has also assisted the State Department of Agriculture in their efforts to use measures of genetic variability in rare plants as tools for evaluating their significance for conservation.

Numerous students have been involved in these projects and in her research on a rare plant in the carnation family, which occurs only on coastal headlands in Oregon. Several have since pursued job opportunities, teaching careers, or graduate school in related fields.

Kephart has spoken at professional and civic organization meetings and has written numerous papers for publication in refereed professional journals.

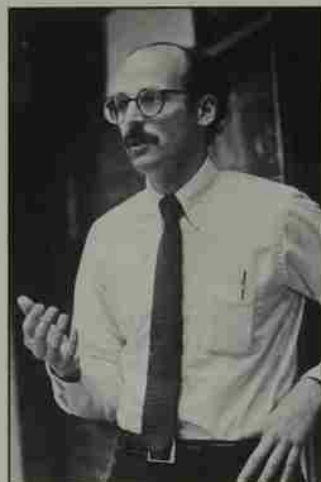

A recent paper by Kephart on a method for assessing the genetic make-up of individual plants, Starch Gel Electrophoresis of Plant Isozymes: A Comparative Analysis of Techniques, was published in the American Journal of Botany and received international attention.

More than 200 reprints have been requested, often from foreign countries. One cytogeneticist from Tokyo University of Agriculture in Japan became interested in the procedure and subsequently spent an entire day learning the technique from Kephart. The procedure has a wide variety of applications as a monitoring tool in forestry, horticulture, and agriculture.

"We know so little about the amount of genetic diversity and the potential value of species and ecosystems," said Kephart, who has also taken an interest in the status and importance of ancient forests in Oregon. "The issue has been falsely characterized as a matter of timber versus spotted owl," she said, "when other factors have had an even greater impact on timber harvests."

Kephart received her doctorate in plant science from Indiana University and holds a B.A. in botany from Ohio Wesleyan University. She currently chairs the conservation committee for the Botanical Society of America and served on a National Science Foundation Panel on Conservation Biology. She is also a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, American Institute of Biological Sciences, American Society of Plant Taxonomists, Ecological Society of America, and the Society for the Study of Evolution.

Steven Maser

Steven Maser, professor of public management and public policy at the Atkinson School, spent seven weeks during spring 1990 teaching a class on the American economy and political system at Tokyo International University in Saitama, Japan.

One of his impressions from that trip was the importance of experiencing other cultures.

"Beyond academic study, experiencing life in another culture is perhaps the best way to understand and improve the balance in one's own society," he wrote in an article for TIU's student newspaper.

While there he chaired a panel at a discussion of Conflict Management in Cross-Cultural Settings at the first international meeting of Western Academy of Management, Shizuoka, Japan, and presented two papers: Bargaining in Public Administration: Decision-Theoretic Approaches, to the Social Science Research Institute, International Christian University, Tokyo; and A Transaction Cost Theory of Public Policy, to the Japan Public Choice Society, Keio University, Tokyo.

Maser was in Japan as part of a faculty exchange program that Willamette has with Tokyo International University.

In September 1989 Maser was one of two Willamette professors chosen for the Burlington Northern Faculty Achievement Award. He was also a finalist in the 1989 Decision Sciences Institute Instructional Innovation Competition for his course Management and the Political Process in 1989, which teaches bargaining and negotiation skills as essential tools for managerial success. In 1988 he shared with two co-authors the Lon L. Fuller Prize in Jurisprudence from The Institute for Humane Studies for a paper entitled, A Bargaining Theory Approach to Default Provisions and Disclosure in Contract Law.

This paper and others have been published, including work in the Journal of Politics, American Journal of Political Science, Harvard Journal of Law and Public Policy, Oregon Business Magazine, and Journal of Economic Behavior and Organization.

His interest in conflict management in the public sector led him to start a class last spring that would allow students real-life experience in dispute resolution.

Two teams, made up of students from the College of Law and the Atkinson

School, looked at a problem within a state agency, interviewed parties involved, and wrote a report that offered solutions to the conflict.

"It was a very successful class," Maser said. "The students learned a lot about how the world really works. By the time they finished, they felt they had made a real contribution. The agency intends to implement several of their suggestions."

Maser earned a doctorate and master of arts degree in political science from the University of Rochester. He received a bachelor's degree in political science from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Valerie Vollmar

In 1975 Valerie Vollmar graduated summa cum laude from the College of Law. She then clerked for a federal judge for two years and practiced law with the Salem law firm of Clark, Marsh, Lindauer, McClinton & Vollmar for seven years. In 1984, she came back to Willamette to teach.

"I decided to become a teacher," Vollmar said, "because I thought I would enjoy it more than practicing law. And I do. I especially enjoy the relationship with students. It's really a mentoring relationship, because the students are all professionals in training. And after they graduate, they become my fellow professionals."

In 1989 Vollmar received the Oregon State Bar President's Membership Service Award at the bar association's annual meeting. This award recognized her 14 years of service to the Bar.

Vollmar's service has included membership on several Bar committees, including the Continuing Legal Education and Legal Ethics committees. She has been a program planner and speaker for numerous continuing education programs and has written for Bar publications. She has also been a member of the Executive Committees of three subgroups within the Bar (the Business and Corporate Law Section, the Taxation Section, and the Estate Planning and Administration Section), and is a past chairperson of the latter group.

In addition, Vollmar is a member of the American Association of Law Schools, the national organization for law professors. Since 1988 she has served on the Executive Committee of that organization's Section on Donative Transfers, Fiduciaries, and Estate Planning.

Vollmar has not limited her involvement to professional activities. She also served on the committee which was appointed by the Marion County Board of Commissioners to help design and select an architect for the new Marion County jail.

"This was fascinating for me because I had never been involved in the criminal justice system before," she said. "I also learned a great deal about architecture."

She also served on the board of directors of American Home Savings while it was under the supervision of the Federal Home Loan Bank and before it was successfully sold to Pacific First Federal.

Vollmar is currently working on co-authoring a law school casebook for West Publishing Company, titled Cases and Materials on Wealth Transmission. The book will be used in the introductory law school course on wills, trusts and estates.

When not writing, teaching or involved in her other activities, Vollmar also enjoys flying. "I like flying in part because it's so different from everything else I do," she said. "But I was surprised how much there is to learn—flying is a little like going to law school!" She has accumulated 110 hours of flying time since her first lesson early last year.

Financial Report: A Legacy of Stability

Willamette University's financial stability enables the administration and board of trustees to devote energies to maintaining and improving the climate for academic excellence, not on economic survival. This is possible because of a tradition of prudent stewardship of resources. It is also possible because of the generosity of past and present alumni and other donors.

The graphs and financial statements which follow provide a thorough picture of changes during the year and of Willamette's financial condition at year end, but these items stand out in my mind:

- For the 13th consecutive year, Willamette ended its fiscal year with a balanced operating budget.
- The endowment contributed more than $3.5 million to the operating budget.
- Gifts and grants totaled $6.7 million.

- Contributions to the operating budget totalled $1,613,000.

- From all sources the University provided $6.5 million in financial aid to worthy and needy students.

- University assets increased by more than $9 million between June 1, 1989, and May 31, 1990.

Annual Gifts Report

I am pleased to follow up President Jerry Hudson's impressive report on academic achievements by introducing this summary of gifts to Willamette in 1989-90. There is a significant correlation between the University's academic and financial successes.

Though I did not attend Willamette myself, I have "adopted" the University as an institution whose mission and programs I believe in and support enthusiastically. Willamette is an outstanding University that is doing a tremendous service to our society in educating tomorrow's leaders for careers, service, and life.

It is very gratifying for me, as a University Trustee, to see what so many of you have made possible during the past year:

- More alumni contributed to their alma mater than ever before;
- More dollars were donated to the alumni annual funds than ever before;
- For every Willamette student in 1989-90, there were almost three donors supporting his or her educational endeavors;
- Nearly $3.1 million was received for capital and endowment projects.

Were you a part of these impressive achievements? If so, I hope you share my sense of pride and accomplishment, and will accept my thanks for helping to enhance educational opportunities for current and future Willamette students.

While this annual gifts report is a look back, please consider what you can do to make next year's report look even better. A habit of supporting the University is one of the best you can develop — your annual fund support is needed each year, and additional gifts for capital and endowment projects are gratefully received whenever you are able. Contributing to Willamette is a very worthwhile and rewarding investment.

I feel privileged to be a part of the Willamette community and hope you do as well. May we be good stewards of the University, doing what we can to make it an even better place for those who enroll in its classes.

Sincerely,

William Swindells
Chairman, Board of Trustees

Jason Lee Society

The Jason Lee Society is the highest of Willamette's annual donor recognition groups. Named for the principal founder of Willamette University, this organization honors individuals who contributed $1,000 or more to the University during the last fiscal year. Lee himself made the ultimate sacrifice, dying while traveling in search of financial support. His entire estate was left to the school, and his gift continues to affect the lives of young people attending his beloved school almost 150 years later.

Waller Society

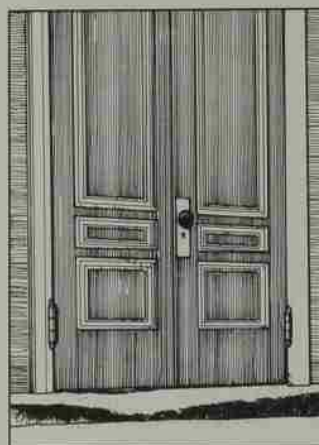

The Waller Society is named for Alvan F. Waller, who carried on the tradition of service and devotion begun by Jason Lee. This society honors those individuals who contributed $500 to $999 to Willamette. It was Alvan Waller, as the University's agent, who bore the responsibility for developing the financial well-being of Willamette as the University grew. It was he who found the funds and supervised the construction of what is now known as Waller Hall, completed in 1867.

R.A. Booth Society

The R. A. Booth Society was established in 1990 to recognize all known planned gift donors. In the spirit of the society's namesake, these individual members provide for future generations at Willamette University.

Robert Asbury Booth (1858-1944) is remembered at Willamette for his concern, commitment and vision. A successful Oregon businessman and public servant, his contagious generosity over four decades was the foundation of Willamette's endowment program.

In 1922 he wrote: "I am led to the belief that what is placed as permanent endowment for education is the highest contribution that I can make to my fellowman. Nothing less than the best I can do is adequate; anything less will leave a broken track and an incomplete earthly existence."

His leadership and financial contributions helped shape the positive educational experiences shared by generations of students attending Willamette.

R.A. Booth Society members have affirmed that "not unto ourselves alone are we born" by establishing planned gifts which benefit the University. These gifts include bequests, gifts of life insurance policies, life income trusts and life estates. Others have made similar provisions for the University but have preferred that their names not be listed here.

If you have named Willamette University in your will or as a beneficiary in a life insurance policy, but are not listed please let us know. We would like to express our thanks.

LEGEND

* Deceased

When Waller Hall was dedicated as University Hall on October 21, 1867, the roof and cupola looked much like they do today. After a fire in 1891, a mansard roof was built, and a square cupola was added to that mansard roof later. Another major fire ravaged the old historic temple in 1919. The roof was then rebuilt to its original design. The renovation completed in 1989 did not change the cupola or roof, but added a new entrance on the south side and involved major interior work. Its completion was celebrated with the rededication on October 20, 1989.

The plaque simulated above lists major donors to the Waller Hall renovation and appears in the entrance to Cone Chapel. The chapel itself (shown in the drawing at the top of the page) is named in honor of benefactors Edwin '41 and June Cone '42. Among the artworks created for the Cone Chapel is the cross by Robert Hess, professor of art.

SALEM ANNUAL FUND

The Salem Annual Fund Campaign raises funds targeted to scholarships for graduates of local high schools. Salem area business and professional leaders attended the Salem Annual Fund luncheon held in the Cat Cavern January 11, 1990. The remarks of Gerry Frank, featured speaker and Willamette trustee, focused on the importance of education in our nation's future, and the role Willamette must play in preparing students for the challenges they will face. Among the 80 guests were several current Willamette students who graduated from Salem high schools and receive scholarship assistance from the University.

Willamette's track was named Charles Bowles Track in May, after extensive improvements. Bowles, shown below cutting the ribbon at the dedication, retired after 25 years as coach and professor at WU. Student athletes like two-time All-American Sonda Strong '91 (above), who set Willamette University records in the 100 and 200 meter sprints, will benefit from the resurfaced track, which was also converted to the international track standard of 400 meters. Renovation funds were provided by the City of Salem, the Bowerman Foundation, alumni and friends of Bowles.
