Willamette University, Salem, Oregon

Larry Large, Willamette's newly appointed dean of students, confers with his secretary Jean about one of the many problems his office confronts.

Large appointed Dean of Students

A young administrator at the University of Oregon has been appointed Dean of Students at Willamette University announced Interim President James H. Corson July 18.

Larry D. Large, 31, Director of Financial Aid at the University of Oregon the past year, will assume duties at Willamette Aug. 15.

Dean Large was selected after an extensive screening and interview process and received the endorsement of a 10-member search and selection committee of trustees, faculty and students.

He succeeds E. Jerry Whipple who announced his resignation last March and served until May 31.

Large, a doctoral candidate at Oregon, graduated in 1964 from Portland State with a major in psychology. He earned his master's degree in history and higher education administration from Oregon in 1970 and is currently working on his doctoral dissertation.

In a short period of time he has progressed through several administrative roles at Oregon, starting in 1964 as special assistant to the Student Conduct Program. He served for a year as an Admissions Relations for the Oregon State System of Higher Education.

In 1967 he became Assistant Dean of Students and two years later Associate Dean of Students serving until his appointment as Director of Financial Aid in March, 1971.

"He comes highly recommended as an administrator with outstanding potential in the area of student personnel services," said Corson, "and the committee was impressed with his youth, vigor and enthusiasm for this position at Willamette. We are most pleased to have him join an already outstanding staff."

Large is a member of several professional groups and has served as Vice President of the Oregon Association of Student Financial Aid Officers.

He and his wife Jeanne have two children.

Interim President named

An experienced school administrator from California has been named interim President at Willamette University. George H. Atkinson, chairman of the University's Board of Trustees, announced June 2 the appointment of James H. Corson to fill the position.

Corson, an educational administrator for over 40 years, resigned his post as executive secretary of the California Association of School Administrators to accept the position at Willamette.

In a letter addressed to "faculty, staff, and student leaders" Corson announced that as of July 6 he was assuming the presidency and that his first job would be "to become better informed."

Corson will administer the ongoing program of Willamette for one year while a search committee seeks a permanent replacement for Dr. Fritz. "My aspiration here can be stated in 5 words: I want to help Willamette," stated Corson.

Corson graduated from the University of Pacific in 1927 and received his master's degree from the University of Southern California in 1936. He took additional graduate work at the Pacific School of Religion and the University of California and holds an honorary doctorate from the University of Pacific.

A bronze medal winner as a discus thrower in the 1928 Olympics, Corson coached track at Modesto Junior College from 1927-29 before returning to Pacific where he progressed from Director of Health and Physical Education to Assistant Dean of Men, to Dean of Men, Dean of Student Personnel, and Dean of the College.

During 11 of his years at Pacific he also was Dean of Men and later Vice President of Stockton Junior College.

Interim President James H. Corson was appointed to his post by the Board of Trustees in July. Corson is a former California school administrator and Olympic discus thrower. A COLLEGIAN interview with Corson begins on page 6.

In 1947 he was named Superintendent of the Modesto City School District, administering the elementary, secondary and college units until 1960 when he took his most recent post with the California Association of School Administrators and the Stockton Youth Council.

Member of the White House Conference on Children and Youth, Corson has also been a member of the California Commission on Equal Opportunities in Education, Phi Kappa Phi, Phi Delta Kappa, Masons, Scottish Rite, Shriners, Boy Scouts of America and the YMCA.

He has traveled throughout Europe, Scandinavia, British Isles and Russia. He and his wife Dorothy have four children.

"The Executive Committee of the Board is pleased to have a man with such broad experience in education administration," said Atkinson, who expects to appoint an official Presidential Search Committee shortly.

While counseling sedentary businessmen, doctors call it "exercise."

And while looking at the small, 50-year-old gymnasium on campus which is supposed to foster fun, fitness, recreation, instruction, play, exercise and sports, observers call it "lacking."

Willamette University needs a new place to play—a new place for the growing demands of physical education, community recreation, intramural and intercollegiate athletics.

Benefactors and beneficiaries of Willamette recognize the need and are calling the place the Physical Education and Recreation Center.

Convo features President Corson

A short Convocation featuring an eight to twelve minute speech by newly appointed Interim President James H. Corson has been scheduled for 11 o'clock Wednesday morning. Corson, who was appointed June 2 to fill the vacancy left by outgoing University President Roger J. Fritz, will be making his first appearance before many returning students.

ASWU President Guy Stevenson will preside over the Convocation and will introduce Corson as well as various student leaders present in the audience.

Also scheduled for the Convocation are comments by Student Bar Association President, Dan Gatti and the introduction of new faculty and staff by Provost Harry Manley.

Pre-Convocation entertainment will be furnished by John West.

Willamette: "Worth the money?"

And so we begin another school year . . .

Traditionally this is the time of year for welcoming freshmen and congratulating them on their wise decision in coming to Willamette. As friendships are made and renewed, as the student comes into first-hand contact with the Willamette academic community, an unseen molding influence characteristic to Willamette University begins to exert itself on the development of the student. This is the value of a liberal arts education, they are told by admissions officers, and this is what makes going to Willamette worth the money. In short, what Willamette had to offer was a definite character and a concrete set of values.

Unlike classes of the past however, this year's freshman class, along with the rest of the Willamette community, has an unprecedented opportunity to reshape and remold the character of Willamette. In short, the roles of "molder" and "moldee" have been reversed. The dissention and divisiveness which marked the events of last year have resulted in vacancies in more top administrative posts at one time than in any year since the founding of Willamette University. This year will see the selection of a new university president, deans of the colleges of Liberal Arts, Music, Law and the Graduate School of Business Administration. Other administrative posts are also vacant. In filling these positions the university will be determining its direction for many years to come.

There are those who have expressed the fear that the resignation of Dr. Jerry Whipple, the firing of Chaplain Phil Harder, the ouster of Dr. Roger Fritz, and the controversies surrounding each of these actions may be mortal blows to the future success of Willamette University. Perhaps they are, the danger clearly exists. But only if turmoil becomes a way of life.

Last year's events, however, were not an attempt to institutionalize turmoil, rather they were a self-motivated urge for constructive change from within the university.

Now in beginning a new year, past disagreements, if not completely forgotten, have at least been set aside to meet the challenge of revitalizing the Willamette campus. Faculty, trustees, and students are, or soon will be, working together on committees to select new permanent deans and a new college president. Competent men have temporarily assumed the reins in managing all of Willamette's vital functions. The "business" of functioning as an institution of higher education goes on.

Looking forward, what one sees before us is an unparalleled opportunity for Willamette University to pause and reassess its goals and values. This will not be a "lost" year of aimless wandering; rather it can be a year in which Willamette can find and establish new direction. It's also an exciting time to be at Willamette.

Graduate Record Examinations available

Princeton, N.J. - Educational Testing Service announced today that under-graduates and others preparing to go to graduate school may take the Graduate Record Examinations on any of six different test dates during the current academic year.

The first testing date for the GRE is October 28, 1972. Scores from this administration will be reported to the graduate schools around December 4. Students planning to register for the October test date are advised that applications received by ETS after October 3 will incur a $3.50 late registration fee. After October 10, there is no guarantee that applications for the October test date can be processed.

The other five test dates are December 9, 1972, January 20, February 24, (only the Aptitude Test is administered), April 28, and June 16, 1973. Equivalent late fee and registration deadlines apply to these dates. Choice of test dates should be determined by the requirements of graduate schools or fellowship sponsors to which one is applying. Scores are usually reported to graduate schools five weeks after a test date.

The Graduate Record Examinations include an Aptitude Test of general scholastic ability and Advanced Tests measuring achievement in 19 major fields of study. Full details and registration forms for the GRE are contained in the 1972-73 GRE Information Bulletin. The Bulletin also contains forms and instructions for requesting transcript service on GRE scores already on file with ETS. Chaplaincy reviewed

The Campus Religious Life Committee of the Board of Trustees has been meeting this summer in an attempt to develop a new program for the University's Chaplaincy Office.

The Committee, chaired by Rev. C. Gene Albertson of Salem's First Methodist Church, has developed tentative goals and objectives to be met by the Chaplaincy program. Methods of sampling campus opinion have been considered, with hope of developing a full-scale report to be presented at the October meeting of the Board of Trustees.

The need for a Chaplaincy review arose out of the controversy surrounding the termination of last year's Philip Harder, who was released following a cut-off of funds for the Chaplaincy office by the Atkinson Fund Committee. Harder, currently serving as a campus minister at Southern Oregon College in Ashland, has been consulted by the committee for his recommendations and views of office needs.

Student members of the special committee of the Board are Ed Austin, senior, and Patrick Pine, junior. Further information may be obtained by contacting either of these students or Rev. Albertson.

Professor James Douglas, long time member of the Willamette faculty, passed away following a coronary attack this summer. Douglas is survived by his widow Ruby, and son, Bruce, a Willamette student.

Douglas received his bachelor's degree from Allegheny College, a master's from the University of Iowa, and his doctorate from Washington State University. He was affiliated with the University of Minnesota prior to coming to Willamette in 1954.

Dr. Douglas became a full professor of English and American studies in 1970, as well as chairman of the American Studies Concentration Area Program. His classes this semester will be taught by Professor Donald Smith.

Federal loans readjusted

Colleges and universities may begin processing student loan applications on the basis of need instead of 'adjusted family income,' it was announced today by William E. McLaughlin, Regional Commissioner, U.S. Office of Education, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Region X, Seattle.

New regulations regarding student eligibility for Federal interest benefits under the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, as required by the Education Amendments of 1972, have been approved and are effective immediately.

The law, signed by the President, requires a student's college or other post-secondary school to determine how large a loan he actually needs to cover educational expenses. The determination of need is submitted to the lender as a recommendation for a loan. This is regarded as the most significant change in the Guaranteed Student Loan Program brought about by the 1972 amendments.

Prior to the new law, the Federal Government paid the interest for any student whose 'adjusted family income' was less than $15,000, until the loan was due for repayment. (Generally speaking, a family with three dependent children and an income of $20,000 probably would have an adjusted family income of less than $15,000.)

Effective July 1, 1972, the Federal Government pays interest on loans made to students whose educational institution so recommends on the basis of Office of Education guidelines.

The college or vocational school now will take into account the 'expected family contribution' (the amount the student, his parents, and spouse may be expected to contribute toward his education), along with other available resources, including financial aid in the form of grants, scholarships, and other loans.

This amount will be subtracted from the estimated cost of education--which for this purpose includes tuition, fees, room and board, and reasonable commuting expense--to determine the amount of need and serve as a basis of a recommendation to the lender.

Since the program began in 1965, students have borrowed more than $4.4 billion in private capital from approximately 20,000 lending institutions. Repayment of the principal is deferred until the student has been out of school between 9 and 12 months.

When the school recommends a loan, the Federal interest benefit will be paid. Where there is no recommendation, the student may still borrow, but will have to pay the interest himself.

However, the U.S. Commissioner of Education intends to issue further regulations regarding both the acceptability of the various systems used in determining the expected family contribution and the basis on which benefits may be paid on loans in excess of the school's recommendation.

Any future regulations will not be retroactive and loans made during the period covered by the interim regulation will be valid and not subject to the new rules.

The Guaranteed Student Loan Program is designed to help and encourage individuals at all income levels to pursue post-secondary education. The loans, which are guaranteed by a State or private non-profit agency or insured by the Federal Government, are available to students accepted or enrolled at least half-time in nearly 8,000 post-secondary institutions in the United States and abroad.

New plans for GSA developing

Remember that $1,000,000 grant Willamette University received last year from California's Seely G. Mudd Foundation?

Willamette was one of six private schools in the United States to obtain money from the Mudd Foundation. After raising another $500,000 Willamette was to open a Graduate School of Administration in business and government.

Plans for the new school have been set-back about six months, outgoing Vice President for Development James S. Triolo said Friday.

Last spring's controversy between students, faculty and former president Roger J. Fritz is the reason for the long delay, Triolo said. "When the campus controversy boiled up it sort of diverted things."

One of the things that was side-tracked, Triolo indicated, was the search for the new school's dean. For fund raising purposes the University needs to have the dean who will run the school in office.

"You can't do much fund raising until you know what kind of school it's going to be," Triolo said.

Original plans called for selection of the dean last spring. Triolo and incoming development director Ralph Wright think January will be the earliest possible date for appointment of the new dean.

Under the terms of the Mudd grant Willamette is to raise another $2.5 million as an endowment for the school's operation. Because of the delay, the Mudd Foundation has moved its deadlines back a year, Triolo said. By June, 1976 Willamette shall have exercised "due diligence" in seeking the endowment money, under the new schedule.

When the graduate school opens it will be the only administration and management school in the Pacific Northwest combining law, business and government in its training program. A two year course will be offered for a master's degree in administration. During their first year students will take general courses in administration and management. Second year students will concentrate either on government or business administration.

A four year program offering Willamette's law degree and a master's degree in administration will also be part of the school's program.

Business and government personnel will be encouraged to take courses at the school, Triolo said. With corporate and individual taxes being so high, Triolo said, "we should be sure that the best trained people go into government service."

Economics professor Richard M. Gillis and political science professors Theodore L. Shay and Edwin J. Stillings wrote the original draft proposal for the graduate school. The board of trustees approved the concept in June 1965.

Triolo accepts new position

James S. Triolo, vice president for development at Willamette University since 1969 announced recently his acceptance of the position of Executive Director of Development for the Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in La Jolla, Calif.

The Scripps Foundation is one of the oldest private, non-profit institutions on the West Coast. It specializes in basic research, clinical service, patient care, and post-doctoral education. It has a world-wide reputation in allergy treatment and immunology.

Interim President James Corson expressed regrets that Triolo will be leaving Willamette after three years of service, during which time Willamette received $5.5 million in gift support.

"His ability and knowledge in development are exceptional, and he is a well-liked and highly respected member of our administration. He and his 'team' have accomplished much for the University," said Corson.

Triolo came to Willamette in 1969 from the Salk Institute also located in La Jolla. He had previously been a development officer at Stanford University, the University of Texas and Southwest Center for Advanced Studies in Dallas, Texas.

President Edmund L. Keeney of Scripps stated that "We are delighted with the appointment of Triolo to our staff and we hope his work will be as satisfying to him as we know it will be fruitful for us."

Triolo is a native Californian and graduate of Stanford. He served in the U.S. Foreign Service as Secretary in the American Embassy in Bogota, Colombia, and Vice-Consul in the American Consulate at Medellin, Colombia, from 1941-46.

Triolo is bi-lingual and has served as a development and public relations consultant for four universities in Latin America.

Triolo will be leaving Willamette Sept. 15 to assume his new duties at Scripps.

Fritz moves to Illinois

Dr. Roger J. Fritz, who vacated the presidency of Willamette University in July, has accepted a consultant position with Robert E. Nelson Associates, Inc., in Elmhurst, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago.

With Nelson Associates, a consulting firm to colleges and universities throughout the country, Dr. Fritz will serve present clients, add new ones, and establish contacts with corporations and public agencies seeking improved management programs and new relationships with higher education.

Fritz was inducted as president of Willamette July 31, 1969, succeeding G. Herbert Smith who headed the West's oldest college for 27 years. He came to Willamette from Moline, Illinois, where he had been a corporation executive for 10 years with Deere and Company. Fritz joined Deere as Secretary and Director of the John Deere Foundation and, in 1965, became Director of Management Development and Personnel Research.

Previously, he had been manager of Public Relations at Cummins Engine Company in Indiana.

Fritz graduated from Monmouth College in Illinois in 1950 and then earned master's and doctoral degrees at the University of Wisconsin, and at Purdue University.

While in business, Dr. Fritz maintained close ties to higher education. In 1961, at the age of 32, Monmouth elected him chairman of its board of trustees and he became the youngest college board chairman in the country. He was Monmouth chairman until assuming the presidency of Willamette.

In February, Fritz was one of five college presidents elected to serve as a trustee and member of the executive committee of the Independent College Funds of America, Inc., in New York City. This organization is composed of 546 colleges and universities which are joined together in 40 state and regional organizations throughout the country.

Fritz has been succeeded by James E. Corson, who will be Willamette's Interim President until a permanent president is appointed. Corson, a longtime school administrator from California, came to the campus early in July.

The Rev. Phil Harder at Willamette.

Harder in Ashland, Now SOC chaplain

Former Willamette University Chaplain Dr. Philip E. Harder has accepted a position as campus minister at Southern Oregon College under the auspices of the Cooperative Christian Ministry.

Harder succeeds the Rev. David Coulter and will assume duties in Ashland Sept. 1.

The Cooperative Christian Ministry is an ecumenical group sponsored by the United Methodist, Episcopal, United Church of Christ, United Presbyterian, Disciples of Christ and Baptist denominations.

Harder served at Willamette for three years and left the campus in June when funds for his position were withdrawn pending a thorough study of the chaplaincy role at Willamette.

Harder earned his doctorate in religious education at the School of Theology at Claremont in 1969. He holds his bachelor and master's degrees in history from Colorado State College.

He taught high school in Colorado for four years and in Klamath Falls for two years before entering the ministry. He taught in the Willamette religion department as an assistant professor.

Big Brother program starts

Beginning its fifth year of service in the Salem community, the Willamette University Big Brother/Big Sister Program is starting its 1972 recruitment drive with an information meeting tonight at 7 p.m. in the Alumni Lounge of the University Center.

The Big Brother Program helps fatherless boys (age 7-13) find a male adult who is willing to serve as a big brother and companion. The little brothers are receiving assistance from the Marion County Public Welfare Department because of their "family's" socio-economic disadvantages.

One of the main goals of the program is to engage the youths in a broad range of activities. Last year group activities included Halloween and Christmas parties, bowling, going to the Shriners' Circus and participating in a United Airlines "flight-seeing" excursion to Astoria.

Most activities, however, are done on an individual basis, in which the big brother plans an outing suitable to both the little brother's as well as his own interests.

This year, as well as in past years, big brothers and sisters will have access to state owned cars, thus easing the transportation problem.

The Big Brother program is currently striving to meet the increasing number of referrals for big brothers and big sisters. Those persons interested in helping these young boys and girls should contact Jay Jamieson at Kappa Sigma or Patty Campbell at WISH if they are unable to attend tonight's meeting.

Willamette University's goal has been said to be "to build self-understanding and self-acceptance and to project that the physically fit are healthier—physically and mentally." It is through the 72,000 sq. ft. Lestle Sparks Physical Education and Recreation Center (PERC) that Willamette feels it can further this goal.

PERC, with a scheduled completion date of January, 1974, will replace Willamette's old gymnasium and offer at least seven "teaching stations"—many more than were ever offered before; with instruction in swimming, scuba, water-safety, life-saving, and handball.

PERC will have three major segments: a gymnasium (named after Chester W. Henkle—one of the major contributors to PERC), a natatorium and field house (named after Edwin E. and June Woldt also large contributors to PERC). Along with the three main segments, will be four handball courts, wrestling and exercise rooms, classrooms, locker rooms, sauna, training room, staff offices and ticket and concession areas.

The actual construction of PERC began on July 12, 1972; with the total cost, including parking lot, bleachers, landscaping, professional fees and various equipment coming to a total of $2.6 million. Two calls for bids were sent out, the first being rejected by Willamette's Board of Trustees.

Construction work on the new Lestle Sparks center.

tees. The design of the building was then modified to reduce the cost "without affecting the functional use of the facilities." Of the second set of bids, Willis A. Hill, Inc. of Salem offered the lowest bid of $2,050,000 and was awarded the contract by Willamette.

"The Board of Trustees of Willamette University desires to provide enduring recognition of the unmatched career of services of Lestle J. Sparks to Willamette University by naming the new Physical and Recreation Center for him. By this action, the Board of Trustees wishes, in a most appropriate way, to honor a man who has given most of his adult life to Willamette University." With this resolution the Willamette University Board of Trustees named the Physical and Recreation Center for Lestle Sparks, a retired Willamette University student, professor and coach. He has been associated with Willamette University for 51 years and was the "official groundbreaker" of the Center on July 13 (see picture).

"When Sparks Center is completed, Willamette will have the most modern and functional sports complex among Northwest colleges," the Trustees said.

Few refused

—Mrs. Blake

"Very few applications are actually turned down," Mrs. Bea Blake, acting director of Willamette University financial aid said Monday.

Mrs. Blake was appointed financial aid director earlier this summer after James Ryan was fired from the post. Ryan had over spent his department's budget, WU officials indicated.

Most of the financial aid requests denied by her office are late ones from incoming students, Mrs. Blake said. Deadline for the requests was February for returning students and June for freshmen.

Students can get jobs, grants and loans through the aid office, Mrs. Blake said. Money for the grants and loans comes from federal and private sources.

"Lots of jobs have come in from the Salem community," Mrs. Blake said. Soliciting by Willamette and "the personal contacts that Mr. Ryan had" have brought the job offers in, she indicated.

Jobs offered by businesses includes clerical, stocking, inventory, typing, income tax and accounting skills and, sometimes, interpreting work.

Mrs. Blake has worked at WU since 1960 and in the financial aid office since 1966. She was Ryan's assistant for a year, until her appointment as acting director.

"Coordination of this office with all the others on campus" is a large part of her work, Mrs. Blake said. "I enjoy the contacts with other people." "The only thing I don't like is the tremendous workload," Mrs. Blake said.

The workload results from the number of students requesting aid. Requests come in throughout the year, Mrs. Blake said. Any type of loan a student asks for from Willamette must go through the financial aid office.

"We try to assist all students who have a financial need, within the limits of available funds," Mrs. Blake said.

Federal programs were recently revised by Congress. Amendments to the Education Omnibus bill and a new Educational Opportunity grant and basic education support programs took effect July 1. Funds for some of the programs have not yet been appropriated, Mrs. Blake said.

Financial aid director Mrs. Bea Blake

Interest rate charges on all loans made to students are about three per cent. Federal guaranteed loans are long term ones.

Because of the amount of work in the financial aid office Mrs. Blake thinks both an assistant director and a director are needed.

"And it helps if you have some student service," she said.

Mrs. Blake has two daughters; Judy, a 1964 WU language major graduate and Mrs. Jacque Allen, a senior at Oregon State University. She has lived in Salem since 1958.

Fall flicks slated

Two film series will be available for the Willamette community enjoyment this year, both at minimal costs to the public. The first is a continuation of the traditional Two-Bit Flicks, now titled Four-Bit Flicks, meaning that costs have risen to 50 cents to cover costs of better quality films. The other series is offered as part of the Cinema Criticism class under the title of Willamette University Film Studies.

Four-Bit Flicks will be shown in the Cat Cavern, Putnam University Center on the following schedule:

Simmons replaces Kirchner

Willamette has a new director of alumni and parent relations and associate director of Development.

He is John Simmons, who replaced Roger Kirchner. Kirchner is currently working on the Marion County Boundary Study Commission.

Simmons will be in charge of solicitation of funds from parents and alumni and will also play an active role in the overall university campaign for funds. Churches and corporations are also in Simmons's domain.

One of the areas that has been given special emphasis in recent years for solicitations from Willamette has been that of deferred giving, according to Simmons. However Willamette has continued aggressive efforts in other areas too, Simmons added.

The tax laws of 1969 are still being reviewed, Simmons said, but he indicated there will probably be no real breakthroughs in obtaining federal funds for the school in the near future. Compared to some other private schools, Willamette's federal funding has been relatively low.

Simmons sees many dimensions beyond simple fund raising in his office. Keeping close to 8800 alumni and parents informed about the "flavor of Willamette" is one of Simmons' big jobs. Much of this information comes through press releases and university publications like the WILLAMETTE SCENE. Conferences, reunions, and other special activities also play a part in the distribution of information and fall under his jurisdiction.

Help Wanted

In these times of high unemployment and inflation let it not be said that the COLLEGIAN proved unwilling to do battle with these scourges of domestic tranquility. We simultaneously offer you the chance to work on our staff and fight inflation by doing it for less (i.e., nothing). To bring everyone a bigger and better newspaper we must enlarge our staff. We are desperately in need of volunteer:

Advertising Salesmen

Artists

Cartoonists

Copyreaders

Filing Clerks

Graphic Artists

Paste-up and Layout Personnel

Proofreaders

Typists

Writers

If you have experience in newspaper production or are willing to learn any of the above tasks we can use your help. Experience is not required, only a willingness to learn.

An interview with Willamette's newly

James H. Corson assumed his position as Interim President in July following the departure of former President Roger J. Fritz.

He resigned his position as executive secretary of the California Association of School Administrators to accept the position at Willamette.

A graduate of the University of Pacific, he received his Masters from the University of Southern California doing further study at the Pacific School of Religion and the University of Pacific.

At the University of Pacific he progressed from Director of Health and Physical Education to Assistant Dean of Men, to Dean of Men, Dean of Student Personnel, and Dean of the College.

In 1947 he was named Superintendent of the Modesto City School District, administering the elementary, secondary, and college units until 1960 when he took his most recent post with the California Association of School Administrators.

President Corson consented to an interview with the COLLEGIAN on Thursday, August 31. An edited version of the interview is printed below.

How were you approached for this position?

I was approached by the chairman of the Board of Trustees earlier when certain problems arose because he knew of my work in California with the Association of School Administrators. My work dealt heavily the last few years in problem solving in terms of local school administration, state school administration, and so forth.

So we just talked as friends. (I've known him for many, many years. We happen to belong to the same church.) He spoke of some of the problems he was confronting. We just chatted and I offered a few suggestions and we let it go at that.

Then some weeks later he happened to mention that he might be searching for an interim president and did I have any suggestions. I mentioned a few names and that was the end of it. So, he said, 'Say, what's the matter with you? Why wouldn't you be a good prospect? Would you be interested in taking this assignment on?'

"So he said, 'Say, what's the matter with you?...'"

At first I said no..."

At first I said no, I didn't think I'd be the one. I planned to retire at least by mid-year or next year. Then I said, after due deliberation, if I had a chance to talk with some of the faculty (it was difficult to talk with students because they weren't here) and some of the board, I'd give it consideration. I came up and talked with some of the faculty who were here, then with some of your administrators, and then came and talked with the board. Then I accepted and came up to be your Interim President.

What were the stated objectives of the Board of Trustees in selecting an Interim President?

They had no president. They had to have some leadership, they felt, in this period of time. They were committed to the idea of a very intensive and careful search for a permanent president.

ident. This could not be completed by this fall in any reasonable manner appropriate to the demands of the situation. They didn't want it to go like a rudder of a ship for a year.

So I came up to assume this interim, not acting, relationship, which would permit them to move forward as rapidly as possible and would enable them to have time to do the job right in searching for a permanent president. Also I would help as a resource person in that search, and would provide the leadership in this period to try to keep us moving forward.

In other words, the ship was out at sea, not at drydock, and you had the students coming in September to move it forward. I asked if there weren't somebody there on campus to assume this responsibility? They said that, due to the various problems and trauma that existed, it was doubtful that this would be the right approach, so would I do it?

And therefore they wanted me to do three things: (1) to assist as a resource person in the search for a permanent president, as I had just helped with that at another university, (2) To provide the leadership and take the responsibility during this year, and (3) to, not just maintain the status quo, but to bring people together in every way possible, that is, to unify in terms of the common cause, common objectives.

"I have, by action of the board...all of whatever it is the president has."

Those three things. What responsibilities did they entrust to you?

I have, by action of the board spelled out in a separate motion, all the responsibilities, all of the authority, all of whatever it is the president has. I am the president. I'm not restricted. I'm not in any way different from Dr. Smith or Dr. Fritz. I have all of the rights and responsibilities, authority and duties and the headaches and everything else connected with the presidency.

Do you have complete organizational freedom?

I'm not sure of the limits on that. You have the policies and by-laws and so forth, of which I'm becoming increasingly familiar. I expect to operate within the frame work of the established policies, rules and regulations of the board and the faculty. I'm not going to throw anything overboard unless it goes through whatever process is required to change policy or procedure.

So, I don't just come up here and start wielding an axe, doing anything I darn please. I have to work within the legal framework of the institution.

Do you see your position as one to initiate change or as one of maintaining the function of the University during this interim period?

"So, I don't just come up here and start wielding an axe, doing anything I darn please."

First of all, it's to maintain our program and see that it moves forward. However, I feel I have the responsibility, working within this framework and in accordance with policy, to initiate change if change would help us accomplish the University's objectives.

I say initiate, I don't say mandate, because I don't think any one individual, president or anybody else, can mandate out here in the back room all by himself. But initiate, yes.

Now that doesn't mean necessarily complete because it might be a two year plan or more, and it depends on how you define initiate. But yes, I think I have that responsibility if I see the need.

Are you impressed with Willamette, its facilities, faculty and direction?

Tremendously. I'm not fully conscious yet of all the facets of a liberal arts education.

It provides the best kind of background for people who are broadminded. They'll go out into the world of work eventually. They're part of the world now, and they'll seek to make their contribution in that world of work, employment and the professions in the best manner possible.

We have a responsibility, if we're going to continue that, to try to maintain a receptivity on the part of the consuming public to see that this kind of a background is a good background and that it ought to employ people of that kind.

I was a philosophy major, and I'm glad that I was, although I never taught philosophy. I got my graduate degree in education. My first job was in physical edu-

appointed Interim President James Corson

"...the University has got to be a little more attractive to the community college transfer student."

cation, and so I got my first training, like industrial training, on the job. You can get this training in graduate work. I got mine in education.

So I think we have a responsibility to indicate and show how this kind of background is a good background for any young person to go out into the work-a-day world with.

The other thing is I believe the University has got to be little more attractive to the community college transfer student. More and more students are going into community colleges either because of expenses or proximity to their home and that's going to grow greatly.

So Willamette will need to find ways and means of attracting and holding the upper division student who might be a transfer from a community college. Maybe this Graduate School of Administration fits into that picture.

What are your goals this year?

Besides the original three I stated earlier, I outlined to the faculty the other day some things that require our attention to getting some answers.

I believe everyone seems to be a little concerned about admissions. Our enrollment has dropped off a little each year, not too much, but for the last two or three years. What are the reasons for it? Is it just typical of the times? Is it because of the unrest here last year? That could account for this last year, but not for the two or three years before.

Some say it's whether you can buy the students or not, if you can offer more. I don't think students operate on that basis entirely. They have realistic needs and we try to determine what those needs are and we try to fit those needs. We have to determine what we have to offer to make them want to come here. So I think we need to take a look at our student aid program and admissions program and see what can be done.

The new Dean of Students is an expert. He has developed an enviable reputation in the last two or three years as associate dean in charge of student aid at the University of Oregon. So, we're going to take advantage of that and take a look at it. It's a concern that we have and ought to find out about it.

Another concern is that I think we are rather loose in defining our policies. I don't know what they all are yet, but I sense a sort of fuzziness in terms of policies and guidelines.

Some people think these policies and guidelines are restrictions. I don't understand that. My point of view is that these policies and guidelines are in a sense enabling. If you don't have restrictions, you have chaos. But they are enabling, because then, knowing the groundwork we all agree on, we can move forward with the assurance that we have a program that we can stand behind mutually and be supportive of.

So, I believe we need to start to help everyone to identify these things that we might do something about. Because if I find it fuzzy, your permanent president might find it fuzzy. And if we can start the ball rolling towards clarification of these things, wherever there needs to be clarification... you see I might initiate in this case.

Now, I've identified two or three other things I'm concerned about. For example, how far have we gone in acting on our last accreditation recommendations? We need to know where we are and what we need to do just to carry out the things recommended to us by the last accreditation team. I think that's an objective.

But I've got to first pursue my original three objectives.

The Board is in the process of selecting a search committee, then I'm going to meet with that committee and we're going to lay out what they see as the responsibilities of what we'll call a Search and Screening Committee. And that committee, as I see it now, will have four or five faculty members, three to four and possibly five students, and a couple of alumni.

My objective, once again, is to carry out the things I was asked to do. I didn't come here to be your permanent president. I have a contract for a year, and if we can do this job in a year, fine, if it takes 15 months or 18 months to do the job, I've agreed to stay until that job is finished. But my appointment wasn't to bypass a screening procedure and get in under an interim name and have me become the permanent president by default. And so I've started to carry out that objective, see.

"We've got more cotton-picking actings and interims around here than you can shake a stick at."

And now I ask the Board, 'What about these actings?' We've got more cotton-picking actings and interims around here than you can shake a stick at. Well, you can't have your Law School go another year or two years on an acting basis and expect it to be beneficial to the Law School. I don't care who the temporary dean is.

We're going to try to have that permanent dean named this year. We've asked that committee to get busy. The Board of Trustees Executive Committee has said, 'We want a report, a recommendation if you can, but a report of definite progress by the October 20th meeting.' That one is a must. It's been hanging for a long time.

Now the Liberal Arts Dean is a different situation. You see, one of my goals, (I'm really giving it to you in reverse here), is to clarify our time schedules and to see what's expected of us and what we can do. Do you treat all these interim jobs exactly the same? The answer is no. Each one has its own demands, its own needs, its own priorities.

So, the Dean of the Liberal Arts, we're going to give, not a moratorium, but, shall we say, the time schedule calls to pick that up in the spring.

Now we are going to get a dean of this new Graduate School of Administration and, if we can, possibly do it by no later than November 15. Because we have a time schedule.

We had a million dollars promised to us last November. July was the first time that contract was available. It didn't even get to us in revised form until July 13th.

We went to Los Angeles and talked with these people and they said the schedule you had before is May 1st for the selection of a dean, May 31st for something else, and start construction on a building in June of 1973, and that you'd have $500,000 more money by that date.

Well, that could be done but it's not realistic. So, we got a year's extension of time, but we want to get busy and do it right now. We're going to get the dean as soon as we can. Now there may not be students involved in this search because we don't have any alumni or any students in this Graduate School of Administration. But faculty will be on it.

One of my big jobs will be to set up at once how we're going to get this money. Now this dean is a first step.

Now the music deal needs to be moved up on, too. This question about whether we're going to combine the music school with Fine Arts. Personally I'm all for a Music School, if we can do it. On the other hand that doesn't mean you can't have an interdisciplinary major.

Now I've talked altogether too long, but these are some of the things we're trying to do.

State program seeks WU students

Willamette undergraduates have been asked to join a State of Oregon tutorial program for Salem area children.

Called ESCAPE, the program gives college students credit for their work in tutoring public school students. Some college members of the program can also tutor at the Hancock Desert Research Institute operated by the Oregon Museum of Science and Industry.

Organized by students, including ex-WU student Steve Barrett, the program works through the Salem community schools program. Math labs at McKinley and Hoover schools and science centers at Whiteaker and West Salem will be part of the program.

Tutors in the ESCAPE program will have to spend three hours a week working for each credit hour received. Weekly seminars "to hassle over what kinds of experiences they have been having" are also required. Students in the program must complete a field project "dealing with their experiences in the program," according to information released on the new program.

Accreditation for the ESCAPE program comes through the Oregon College of Education.

Concert review

by Pat Pine

Tower of Power played at the Armory Sunday night to one of the smallest audiences EJD or any other promoter has ever had. In some ways, it was pleasant, but on the whole, the concert lacked quality.

Two rather mediocre groups backed up the headliners, one group whose name I am unable to recall (probably in the best interests of readers), while the other band, believe it or not, was Everything is Everything. Some diehards may remember when they played at WU last spring. (Remember the guy with the pink wig?) Well, Everything is Everything is not everything that many of the people in the half-empty pavilion made them out to be. After that depressing start, and a wait of forty minutes, during which a balky P.A. system was repaired, our saviors appeared. Tower of Power proceeded to render the concert bearable. They kicked things off with 'Drunk as a Skunk' from their first album, EAST BAY GREASE. I think we ate it up because it was a substantial improvement over the earlier fare, but it was not a musical masterpiece by any stretch of the imagination.

The funkifiers then reeled off a new song from their upcoming album, TOWER OF POWER, which seemed to lack any distinctive material in comparison with some of their past work. But, by now, half the crowd was dancing and the horn section seemed to be getting it together.

A collection of familiar songs were belted out behind the leadership of Rick Stevens, doing an adequate job on vocals, while Skip Mesquite added some enjoyable solos on tenor sax and flute. Running through 'Back on the Streets Again', 'You Got To Funkify', 'You're Still A Young Man' and 'Down to the Nightclub', Tower of Power got the crowd warmed up to a degree with competent work by the horns; but the bass and drum players left a lot to be desired. They did get it all together, especially vocally, for 'Sparkling in the Sand', a pleasant change of pace from the high-powered stuff.

Although the concert was certainly less than four bucks worth of show, it was nice not having to compete with a truckload of teenyboppers from Molalla to see a band that has the ability to loosen things up. Too bad we couldn't have moved the whole gig to a nightclub, but Salem lacks in that department, too.

In May, 1972, the 1973-74 competition for grants for graduate study abroad offered by the U.S. Government under the Fulbright-Hays Act and by foreign donors was officially opened by the Institute of International Education. Now, only a few more weeks remain in which qualified students may apply for one of the 590 awards which are available.

Full Grants, which provide round-trip transportation, tuition and maintenance for one academic year, are available to 29 countries. U.S. Government Travel Grants are offered to 11 countries and foreign donors provide awards to 14 countries. Candidates must be U.S. citizens at the time of application, hold a bachelor's degree or its equivalent by the beginning date of the grant, have language ability commensurate with the demands of the proposed study projects, and good health. Preference is given to applicants between 20 and 35 years of age.

A $1,000 grant to sponsor a series of lectures on "The Implications of the Population Explosion," was received by Willamette University Thursday. The grant was made by the S&H Foundation, Inc., which is sponsored by the Sperry and Hutchinson Company.

Interim President James Corson of Willamette said that five public lectures will be held on successive Thursdays starting Sept. 14. They will be presented by Dr. James R. Crook, a Doctor of Tropical Medicine, in Waller Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Willamette is one of 35 colleges throughout the country to win an S&H lectureship grant. There were 340 proposals for grants. Thurman F. Zeitler, Salem manager of S&H, and Jay Brown, zone manager from Eugene, presented the check to Corson.

Brown said the lectureship program was designed to bring prominent and thoughtful speakers to college campuses and to help strengthen college and community ties by opening the lectures free to the public.

S&H began its lectureship program in 1960. Since then, more than 400 grants totaling $750,000 have gone to more than 300 colleges and universities.

The Willamette Forum Speakers Series has two men scheduled to give addresses during the fall semester.

On Wednesday, Oct. 11, 9 A.M. in Smith Auditorium, Dr. Robert A. Levine will explicate "Urban Analysis." Levine supervised the creation of a five-year anti-poverty program for the United States and also prepared the budgets for the Office of Economic Opportunity. Levine is a prolific writer and has published numerous articles on topics ranging from the arms debate to inflation.

Two weeks later, October 24, Robert Goralski, Washington Correspondent for NBC news, will assess Election Day 1972. Goralski will speak at 8 P.M. in Smith Auditorium.

The Associated Students of Willamette University will once again be able to avail themselves of the services of the student body offices. The offices are located on the second floor of the Putnam University Center and may be contacted by telephoning 370-6245 or 370-6250.

Office manager Sue Rauch, sophomore, adds a secretarial staff providing student services including the typing of papers and mimeographing and reproduction. Prices of the services vary.

Office hours will be 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Student body officers will be in the office at various hours. Information on each officer's schedule will be available by calling the office.

Current student body officers are Guy Stephenson, president; Patrick Pine, first vice-president; Patricia Diltz, second vice-president; Jeanne Hermans, secretary, and Brad King, treasurer. Information on student body activities, committee appointments, budgeting, and general information may be obtained from the officers or the office staff.

Interim President James Corson announced Friday the realignment of Willamette University's Development and Public Relations Offices.

The new administrative changes, which will create an Office of University Relations, have been reviewed by the executive committee of the Board of Trustees and will become effective Sept. 15.

The realignment proved necessary to fill the vacancy left by present Vice President for Development James S. Triolo who is leaving Willamette to become executive director of development at Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in LaJolla, Calif.

Ralph H. Wright, Public Relations Director the past year, will become Assistant to the President for University Relations with supervisory responsibility for the Development-Public Relations staff.

Guthrie E. Janssen, part-time Director of Planned Giving the past two years, will become full time Director of Development.

Robert C. Woodle, Director of Public Information for nine years, will become Director of Information Services with respensibility for University publications and news dissemination. Janice McMillin will continue as Wright's assistant.

John B. Simmons had earlier accepted the position of Director of Alumni Relations and Associate Director of Development.

Along with the reorganization and new assignments for present personnel, Corson indicated that the development staff would be augmented in the future if and when additional skilled staff is needed.

"While Triolo's services will be missed, he leaves a well organized office and topflight team of professionals whose background and experience offer us considerable flexibility in the development-public relations area," said Corson.

Wright, an advertising/marketing/communications specialist for 20 years, is a former Vice President for Foote, Cone and Bolding advertising agency of Chicago. He is a journalism graduate of Notre Dame with a master's degree in English for De Paul University.

Since 1964, Janssen has been a public relations and development consultant for several private institutions in Oregon seeking philanthropic gifts. Prior to that he had extensive experience as a writer, editor and a producer for radio and television programs. He is a specialist in estate planning and deferred giving programs.

Janssen is a graduate of the University of Illinois. He has taken graduate studies at the American University in Cairo and the Institute of General Semantics in Connecticut.

A 1963 graduate of Willamette, Woodle will supervise the preparation and production of University printed matter for off-campus distribution. He remains as editor of the Willamette Scene quarterly and director of campus news dissemination.

Simmons has held publications, public relations and development responsibilities at three California colleges, including his alma mater Stanford. He will direct the annual giving programs and supervise alumni, parent and church relations.

Referral system

The General Services Administration has established a national system of referral agencies to provide assistance to the public.

The Federal Information Center program (FIC) was first established on a pilot basis in 1966. Since then the system has been expanded until there are now over 35 centers in major cities throughout the country. The main goal of the program is to establish a closer relationship between the public and government. The primary purpose of the agency is to make referrals to the proper federal agencies and thus avoid confusion and lost time.

The FIC's are staffed with information specialists. They are trained personnel who are prepared to answer inquiries about the services and programs of the Federal government or to direct an inquirer to the source of information.

The Portland FIC is staffed by Coral Buechler, Phyllis Classen, and Pamela Gammon. The Center, which began operations in March 1970, answers approximately 5,000 inquiries per month.

Inquiries may be made in person or by mail or telephone.

The address is 208 U.S. Courthouse, S.W. Broadway and Main Street, Portland, Oregon 97204, telephone 221-2222. Courtesy telephone lines put inquirers in touch with the agency or person best able to fill his need.

McAlister resigns

Prof. Roger McAlister, Assistant Professor of Art at Willamette University since 1970 announced in a letter dated July 13 his resignation from the Willamette faculty. McAlister stated that he had resigned his position at Willamette to accept the chairmanship of Lane Community College because he had found he could "no longer be as effective in furthering the progress of art programs in this area as I shall be able to be in a leadership role at Lane Community College in a larger department."

In announcing his resignation he expressed regrets at the lateness of his action and offered his apologies to the "many fine students pre-enrolled for my fall semester classes." Adding that, "If in the future the situation should change and conditions such that my abilities and experience could be helpful to Willamette, I would be honored to consider resuming faculty ties with the university."

Bearcats win NWC trophy

With first division finishes in all nine sports this past year, Willamette University athletic teams garnered the coveted Northwest Conference All-Sports Trophy for the first time in the three-year history of the award.

The Bearcat teams replaced two-time winner Lewis & Clark by edging Pacific Lutheran for the trophy, 98 points to 92.

Each sport has equal weight and points are distributed on a 14, 12, 10, 8, 6, 4, 2, 0 basis on the order of finish from first to eighth among the conference teams.

Following the Bearcats and Lutes were Lewis & Clark 78, Whitworth 67, Pacific 54, Linfield 48, Whitman 47, and College of Idaho 20.

Willamette's high finish came on co-championships in football and basketball, runnerup honors in swimming, track and tennis (tie), third place showings in cross country, wrestling and baseball, and a fourth place finish in golf.

"It's the highest award a team can win in our conference," said Bearcat athletic director John Lewis, "because it usually exemplifies a well balanced, strong athletic program. We've been fortunate to have so many fine student-athletes competing this year."

PLU won two titles outright, swimming and tennis, and tied for the football championship, but fifth place finishes in cross country and baseball hurt the Lutes' overall point total.

Schaffeld, Lee ready Bearcats

The 1972 Bearcat gridders according to new head football coach Joe Schaffeld will be out to repeat their 1971 Northwest Conference title, only this year uncontested. Willamette salvaged a tie for the NWC title a year ago with Pacific Lutheran and Linfield in what was long time, Ted Ogdahl's, last season.

Prospective little All-American candidates senior tailback, Dan Mahle; and junior linebacker, Byron Brooks, lead the line-up with another 25 returning lettermen. Schaffeld will need to fill some gaps in the line up created by graduation. Lloyd Merryman and Gunnar Guttormsen left vacancies in the wide receiver position, while the graduation of Dave Cook and Jerry Todd, who in Coach Schaffeld's estimation were two of Willamette's most capable interior linemen ever, will leave a weak spot there.

Graduation also robbed the Bearcats of Jeff "Rock" Hudson, place kicking specialist for the past few seasons, who is now assisting Schaffeld. Jim Anderson, a freshman from Punahou whose foot has given him a 50 yard range is the top prospect.

After missing two seasons because of injuries, senior Rocky Higgins will be returning to bolster the defensive line. Chuck Marshall and Dwight Jeffers have been switched from the offensive to the defensive line but were said by Schaffeld to be adjusting well to their tackle spots.

Also showing hustle on the line according to Coach Schaffeld are guards, junior Mike Ivie, and sophomore, Doug Brittingham; and ends, seniors Gene Dagostini and Chuck White. Three-year letterman, Gus Arzner, will be performing at the center position.

Willamette's backfield will be one of the strongest in recent years. Twice an NWC all star with 110 yards per game average over 2 years, Dan Mahle will spearhead the rushing attack. Despite a shoulder injury, senior quarterback Greg Gilbert should see action soon. Improving throughout 1971-72, Gilbert completed 46% of his aeriels for a 72 yards per game average. Juniors Steve Bastian and Jeff Ives will be the standouts in the deep backfield.

Coach Schaffeld predicted that Lewis and Clark College and Pacific Lutheran University will also be the conference's toughest contenders. He noted however that Willamette faces a very difficult lineup of non-conference games. The Bearcats' first two games will be against Eastern Washington State College, who defeated Willamette 9-7 last fall, Freshmen showing promise in the backfield are Mason Honda of Miliau Town, Hawaii, Tim Royalty of Pasadena; Jeff Jones of Jacksonville, Oregon; and Gary Rosatelli of Aliquippa, Pennsylvania.

On the line are Mike Long of Yamhill, Oregon; Joe Cho of Kailua, Hawaii; and Steve Turner of San Bruno, Calif.

Although Schaffeld and Lee are enjoying new positions, neither is really 'new' to Willamette scene or to each other. Schaffeld has been assistant coach under long time head coach, Ted Ogdahl, for the past six years, while Lee quarterbacked the Bearcats from 1959-62. Later Lee served as Schaffeld's assistant at Central Catholic High in Portland in 1964-5. Schaffeld then came to Willamette, and Lee succeeded him.

Willamette will open against Eastern Wahsington, Saturday, September 16 at 1:30 p.m. in McCulloch Stadium.
