On Monday, Feb. 11 in a noon meeting at Kresge Theatre on the Willamette campus, Dr. Robert Lisensky announced to the Willamette faculty and staff his resignation from the University presidency to become effective August 1, 1980.

The president cited a need for "new leadership" for the decade ahead and expressed hope that the University would be able to fill the position by the time he steps down.

Lisensky, 51, submitted his resignation to the Board of Trustees and the Executive Committee on Friday, Feb. 8. The Board "reluctantly" accepted his resignation at its meeting on Feb. 15 and at that time laid the framework for a Presidential Search and Screening Committee to begin the search for a new leader.

Lisensky: 'There is need for a change'

"I wouldn't have your job for anything." "Why did you resign?" Both statements came from many of the same people. These contradictory comments indicate an awareness of the complexity of the position with its built-in conflict areas but also a respect for the leadership potential of the role.

I did not resign because the assignment was impossible or not meaningful. The last seven years contained some of the most rewarding experiences I have had in my working career. I also did not resign because of health problems. My work schedule in the last year and one-half indicates no problem in that area.

Then, why? There is a need for change. The goals I set for myself have, at least partially, been completed. We have made major changes in the curriculum in all three colleges, improved the physical space for our academic areas, strengthened the governance structure enabling us to operate from a basis of cooperation and trust, and developed a sound long-range planning process.

One could continue to sharpen these objectives but we would be repeating that which has now become a part of our history. We need new challenges, ideas and goals. Leadership change often provides the potential for growth and development.

Just as institutions need revitalized new experiences, so too the individual. With a reduction of family responsibilities, there is a special opportunity to consider a career change. Thus, my desire to resign is not because of an indifference or a turning away but because of a love and commitment to Willamette University.

I look forward to the appointment of a new president. Willamette University is able to put its best foot forward; we have much to offer. We have also elected an outstanding Search and Screening Committee. This is a very strong committee which I deeply respect. It will represent our interests and also be able to express our hopes and aspirations.

I am grateful for the support that I have received from the various constituencies of the University and know that we will effectively respond to the challenges of the 1980s.

— Robert Lisensky

Strong leadership punctuates Lisensky's service

On February 11, there seemed to be one topic everyone on campus had in common: the resignation of Dr. Robert P. Lisensky, effective August 1.

When Dr. Lisensky was invested as Willamette's 19th president on a sunny August 15 in 1973, he indicated that five or six years was long enough for a person to be president of a college. Still, the announcement came as a shock. To many, a Willamette without Dr. Lisensky's strong and dynamic leadership was an unpleasant thought. He had steered the University on a course that augured well for the 1980s, a period expected to be difficult for colleges and universities because of declining enrollment, inflation and other factors that will put extreme pressure on institutions of higher education.

Why was Dr. Lisensky leaving? He believes the University needs strong, consistent leadership through the 1980s and feels he cannot and should not continue as president through the decade. In addition, he has accomplished his important goals in academic programming, governance, fund-raising, long-range planning, plant development and administrative organization. In short, he wants to try something new.

Dr. Lisensky told Willamette Collegian Editor Sande Burton that he was having difficulty finding a balance between stress and reward, the frustrations and the benefits. He said that his health (he had open heart surgery last August) was not a factor in his decision. He resigned with no job lined up and expresses the hope for some vacation at his Black Butte home before he goes back to work again.

Many people on campus say it seems a short time between that small investiture service on the lawn outside the Fine Arts Building to the president's announcement to the campus in Kresge Theatre February 11. Still, when accomplishments are listed, one is taken aback.

The Committee for Institutional Change—and the subsequent long-range planning. New interdisciplinary courses and new requirements and guidelines in the College of Liberal Arts. The Alternative Futures Project. The student development center. Self-studies in every department. Record enrollment. Improved governance (Faculty Council, Academic Council, Classified Council). Gains in endowment and fund-raising, including more annual funds. Administrative reorganization with an evaluation and renewal plan. An Equal Opportunity Program and a plan to respond to the needs of the handicapped. The opening of the Geo. H. Atkinson Graduate School of Administration and the construction of its Seeley G. Mudd Building. A research and writing center in the College of Law. The renovation of the old music building into an art facility. The renovation of the old gym into a modern theatre facility. And now a $15 million renovation and renewal plan with plans well underway and one building, Collins Hall, already funded.

An energetic and impressive list to say the least. His accomplishments went beyond lists, however. Dr. Lisensky also brought to Willamette further respect in the national higher education community.

Within the past year, he has become president of the National Association of Schools and Colleges of the United Methodist Church and chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Center for Higher Education Management Systems (NCHEMS), a nonprofit organization formed to improve management in postsecondary education.

Robert Lisensky has been a busy man over the past seven years and as the search for a new president is underway, one often hears the wish expressed that Willamette will do as well this time as it did in 1973.

CAMPUS CAPSULES

New grad requirements set

Students entering Willamette in the fall of 1981 will face some new and more stringent graduation requirements.

The Willamette faculty, after much debate, voted to approve the new requirements which will increase the number of credit hours required for graduation, to make both mathematical and English language skills mandatory, and to require a selection of mathematical courses for the Bachelor of Science degree.

In addition, a general education program calling for study experiences grouped within five basic areas—humanities, natural sciences, literature, social sciences and fine arts—was also approved. Students will also need courses which transcend discipline boundaries. Guidelines also suggest participation in activities with attention to health.

Beginning in 1981, entering freshmen will need 31 credit hours to graduate instead of the 30 now required. English proficiency is determined by the Department of English and will continue to be so determined; however, graduates will also need mathematical proficiency as defined by the Math Department.

The Bachelor of Science degree, which has not had specific requirements such as the language requirement for a Bachelor of Arts degree, now will call for at least two credits from two categories among calculus, statistics, computer programming and logical analysis courses.

Faculty members and students began working on the proposed guidelines and requirements in 1977. For two years, Academic Council and Academic Programs have been working on the material presented. Nine drafts were developed and discussed in order to bring the proposal to the faculty this year.

It took four weeks of debate before the amended version of the requirements and guidelines was finally accepted by a vote of the faculty, March 25.

Tuition, living costs go up

An increase of 13.2 percent in student tuition for the 1980-81 school year at Willamette University will see tuition go above the $4,000 mark.

The increase, which was announced by President Robert Lisensky in a letter to Willamette parents, will see undergraduate student tuitions go from the current $3,625 to $4,110. In addition, the campus living costs will also go up. Living costs for a double occupancy room will be $1,030 as compared to the current $909 cost. Single occupancy room rates will raise from $1,346 to $1,520.

Meal costs will increase from $786 to $870 for the 19-meal plan and from $736 to $820 for the 14-meal plan. The total room and board increase is 12.1 percent.

Lisensky's letter also noted that Willamette will increase its financial aid budget proportionately to help offset the increased costs.

The letter cited "soaring operating costs, especially in the utilities area," as the reasons for the action.

Fires had Willamette's campus buzzing for several weeks in the spring as the University was plagued by three blazes in three different buildings within a matter of weeks. Two, in fact, were set within 12 hours of one another. Fires ravaged Walton (above), Gatke and Baxter and in addition several false alarms were sounded on campus. Firemen have determined the blazes to be arson-caused.

An ounce of AGSA offers pound of cure

There are times when Willamette's Atkinson Graduate School of Administration can be both an ounce of prevention and a pound of cure, especially when dealing with businesses in and around Salem.

Through the Small Business Institute program established in 1972, the Atkinson School has had a very "healthy" influence on the businesses it has worked with through Professor Steve Archer's entrepreneurship class.

What the Small Business Institute program amounts to is the utilization of university and college business majors as consultants, or counselors, to small businesses which have requested assistance from the Small Business Administration (SBA). At Willamette, that means the Atkinson Graduate School and specifically, Archer's entrepreneurship class.

Currently, students from nearly 470 colleges and universities are working in the program. Through the SBA, teams of two students under the guidance of a professor, work with a businessperson for a term. At the end of the term, a written and oral report are offered to the businessperson with recommendations for improvements in the working business. Students are monitored by both the SBA and the professor.

Over an eight-year period, a staggering total of 100,000 businesses have been involved in the program in the United States.

That kind of involvement is reflected in the Willamette participation. The SBA assigns the Atkinson Graduate School five cases annually. Of those five, Archer noted that 75 percent really need help and the other 25 percent want to help the students. Any way you look at it, it's a pretty good deal.

For the Salem businesses, the deal has been more than good, it's been "healthy."

"We've made more than one business healthy," noted Archer, "and we've prevented some others from bankruptcy."

That kind of shot in the arm is welcome to any business and it has kept the Atkinson program in a pretty healthy state of its own.

The Small Business Institute program began at the Atkinson School in the '77-'78 academic year and right away things were off to an impressive start. One of the teams that first year won the second prize in an overall rating of 8,000 small businesses assisted by the SBA program. It was a nice feather in the first-year cap and more than incentive enough to keep the program going.

Even with incentive and success on hand, the program is not without its difficulties, as Archer pointed out. The main problems seem to stem from establishing a rapport between the students and the businesses. Finding a "trust" is the important step to success.

"Once the businesses trust the students, then the working conditions are a lot easier," offered Archer.

The satisfactions seem to outweigh the problems in the minds of the students, who get a first-hand opportunity to apply what they have been learning. Bill McMillen, a second-year student at the Atkinson School, is one who has found the SBI program stimulating.

"Finally we have a chance to use the theory we have been exposed to in the last year and a half," he says. "We have the opportunity to shrink large-world perspective into a small business, which gives us good hands-on experience and improves our communication and problem-solving skills."

McMillen went on to term the program "invaluable." "I've learned a lot just taking part in it."

For Barry Gray, also a second-year Atkinson student, the program didn't jell at first. Gray suffered through the problem of "trust" and found the going tedious at the beginning. He was hoping to see results materialize faster than they did.

"It took a while before the owner trusted us. At first he expected that he would have to teach us business, but now he is happy to see us whenever we visit because he knows that he can learn from us," says Gray, who is obviously happier about the way things are moving now.

Professor Archer makes a point of the role of the students as consultants.

"The students aren't there to do the bookkeeping. They're supposed to recommend improvements to the businesses they work with," emphasized Archer.

Mostly, the work involves finance, marketing, cash budgeting, inventory control, work on accounting systems and marketing surveys. In short, it's getting businesses down to business.

When a semester is finished, the teams report their findings to the SBA, which in turn evaluates the reports and gives feedback to the students. In the end, everyone benefits. Archer estimates that since the program began, "we have helped 35, mostly young businesses in the Salem area at no cost to the business."

"It's a very useful way for the University to help the community."

That it is. It's just good medicine for all. An ounce of prevention here and a pound of cure there can do wonders.

"That the state of knowledge is not prosperous nor greatly advancing; and that a way must be opened for the human understanding entirely different from any hitherto known, and other helps provided, in order that the mind may exercise over the nature of things the authority which properly belong to it."

— Francis Bacon

Good old Francis wasn't just wasting paper when he jotted down those lines and in reviewing the list of impressive speakers who have drifted through the Willamette campus over the past academic year, it would seem the University has taken the idea to heart.

The variety of speakers who have surfaced on campus in the past few months would turn many big-name promoters green with envy. The list of academicians and dignitaries could light up many a marquis and tickle more than its share of fancies. For speakers and listeners it's been close to paradise.

From the penetrating eloquence of former Israeli foreign minister Moshe Dayan to the energetic performances of the Tears of Joy Puppet Theatre and the South Dakota Theatre Caravan to the timely offerings of Federal Reserve Governor Nancy Teeters, the Willamette and Salem communities have had a healthy serving of topical views and ideas as well as top entertainment.

In short, it's been a yeoman year for the combined University Speakers Committee (USC) and Distinguished Visitors Committee, and Willamette in general.

Since the merger of those two groups in 1974, the program has been moving upward at a steady pace with an ever-wider range of speakers appearing each year and offering a greater variety of academic and real world perspectives.

Using a variety of funds provided by the Atkinson Fund, the Associated Students of Willamette University, the general University budget and various private sources, USC is wrapping up a year of success.

Dayan's visit in December highlighted the year and packed Cone Field House with nearly 4,000 eager listeners. Dayan's crowded lecture was just the frosting on a constantly building cake. Journalist-Author David Halberstam, Federal Reserve Governor Nancy Teeters, PLO Information Officer Hatem Hussaini, leading civil rights advocate and defense attorney Leonard Weinglass and U.S. Control and Disarmament Agency spokesperson Lawrence Weiler helped to add even more luster to the speakers list.

USC kept busy. In cooperation with University Chaplain Phil Hanni's office, a weekly Wednesday morning University convocation series was offered for the entire campus. And again the speakers list was an exciting one.

Willamette graduate Robert Sayre, the United States Ambassador to Brazil, spoke on the current U.S. foreign policy and the director of the Environmental Studies program at St. Lawrence University, Dr. Alan Schwartz, presented a slide/lecture convo on "Environmental Impacts of the 1980 Olympics."

The University was even able to pick from its own to help ignite the strength of the speakers list. WU College of Law faculty member Dr. Farooq Hassan, an internationally-known lecturer, author, barrister and diplomat, discussed "Islamic Fundamentalism and Current U.S. Foreign Policy in the Middle East."

Also on the home front, Willamette president Robert Lisensky presented new plans for the new University library and major building renovation to a large audience in a presentation entitled, "Willamette's New Look."

Convocation offered other diversions. The talented Tears of Joy Puppet Theatre performed a short play during a February convo and guitarist Jim Greeninger and the visiting South Dakota Theatre Caravan also added a twist to the schedule with entertaining performances.

The convocation also took a look at other issues. Dr. Leroy Rouner of Boston University lectured on "Christianity and Other World Religions," and Oregon State University's Dr. Marcia Shaw spoke on "Communication Between Women and Men" earlier this month.

Prior to Moshe Dayan's lecture, the University convocation series hit on the Middle East issue when William Helseth, a veteran foreign diplomat with the U.S. State Department discussed, "The Future of the Mideast: Prospects for Peace."

Dealing further with current events, Dr. Tom Weisskopf, professor of economics at the University of Michigan, spoke on "A Radical Perspective on the United States' Economic Crisis." And for the sports-minded and business-minded, Portland Trail Blazer Director of Player Personnel Stu Inman was another speaker.

Big semester speaker list continues banner year

The spoken word proves to be a powerful weapon when used by skilled speakers. Willamette had an entire series of skilled people lined up during the course of the year, ranging from Portland Trail Blazer Director of Player Personnel Stu Inman to Palestine Liberation Organization Information Officer Hatem Hussaini.

The group included Willamette graduate and former Dean of Students Senator Mark O. Hatfield (in sequence below), who spoke to a large and enthusiastic gathering during Founder's Day activities on campus. The appearance by the Oregon senator kicked off

...JUST ABOUT ANYTHING

Health Basketball Business Communications Religion Economics Theatre Middle East Olympics

Various activities on campus also brought in top speakers to take part in the programs. In November, a three-day food and hunger conference drew a long list of experts to the campus including Francis Lappe, author of "Diet for a Small Planet" and co-director of the Institute for Food and Development Policy.

The second Willamette Valley Racial Minorities Consortium featured Dr. Carlos Munoz, Jr. among others and the Women and the Law Conference was highlighted by an appearance by Margaret McKeena, Deputy Counsel to President Jimmy Carter.

Executive Director of the Chamber Music Society of New York's Lincoln Center, Norman Singer, and American Can Senior Vice-President Judd Alexander each spent a week on the Willamette campus lecturing to classes and the campus community as Woodrow Wilson fellows.

While the visitors were many, there was still plenty of influence from within. The Office of Academic Affairs and the Student Development Center scheduled seven Monday night faculty lecture-discussion groups at various residence halls, focusing on "The Challenge of Change."

Included in the series were: "World Power and Human Rights: Iran and Afghanistan" with Dr. Jim Hanson, Dr. Farooq Hassan and Dr. Ken Smith leading; "Personal Beliefs: Beyond Dogmatism or Anarchy" featuring Dr. Bill Duvall, Chaplain Phil Hanni and Dr. Ken Nolley; "I Win—You Lose: The Courts as First Resort?" with President Lisensky, Dr. Sue Leeson and College of Law Dean Lee Tornquist; and "Energy and Lifestyle" with Dr. Russ Beaton, Dr. Randy Ireson and Dr. Carol Long heading the discussion.

Other offerings in the faculty discussion series included "Death and Dying" with Dr. Jim Bjorkquist, Dr. Jerry Canning and Dr. Mary Ann Youngren; "Whole Person Health and Living in the '80s" with WU Nurse Practitioner Patti Bowen, Methodist Pastor Bill Hoffhines, Saga Nutrition Specialist Jari Knudsen, Dr. Linda Garrett and Dr. Verni Petrick; and finally, "Autonomy and Commitment in Personal Relationships" with Dr. Donna Douglass, Dr. Carol Ireson, Director of Admissions Frank Meyer and Assistant Dean of Students Joan Williamson.

In the spring, the Willamette Collegian and the Office of University Relations brought to campus a variety of journalists in a series called "Meet the Press." The series kicked off in early April with John MacMillin, publisher of the Oregon Statesman and Capital Journal in Salem. Other participants, including some still to appear, are Salem advertising agency head Wally Hunter, Capital Journal Managing Editor John Erickson, Peter Korn of the Portland-based Oregon Magazine, and Willamette Director of University Relations Ralph Wright.

Willamette's Graduate School of Administration brought a variety of top managers and administrators to campus under their Executive-in-Residence program. Participants included, among others, Chairman of the Board of U.S. Bancorp John Elomaga, President of U.S. Bancorp Carl Mays, President of U.S. National Bank Robert Mitchell, and U.S. National Bank Economist Kevin Kelly.

This month, the Kappa Sigma Fraternity is sponsoring a series of fireside chats for the campus community with Oregon Governor Victor Atiyeh, Secretary of State Norma Paulus and Chief Justice Arno Denecke scheduled to appear.

If it seems like a long list, it is. But it is a list that will probably keep growing. It's the kind of thing that Francis Bacon would have encouraged and it would seem the Willamette community is making the most of its opportunities. You might even call it a "Speaker's Paradise."

a busy semester of activity for the Speaker's Committee.

Author Jean Auel (left, page 5) was the featured speaker at the annual Friends of the Library Banquet. She received an incredible $100,000 advance prior to her first book—a fiction work concerning prehistoric life. She met with interested students and the public in the Alumni Lounge for an informal discussion prior to her speaking engagement.

Civil rights advocate Leonard Weinglass, one of the country's most noted defense attorneys (center, page 5), appeared through the Law School in Smith Auditorium.

Hatem Hussaini (right, page 5) of the PLO spoke before a crowd of 100 in Waller Auditorium, explaining the PLO view on the Middle East situation.

The busy semester also saw Nancy Teeters, Robert Sayre and Harlan Cleveland all appear on campus. In short, it was a banner year for the Speaker's Committee and one the Willamette campus will remember.

121 YEARS OF SERVICE RETIRES

Quantity changes, quality remains

The numbers may have changed a bit over the years but the quality seems to be a constant. At least as far as Ted Butler is concerned. Having served the Willamette College of Law for 31 years, Professor Butler will retire at the end of the current semester but he'll be taking with him some fond memories of a "quality" student body. And he will leave some fond memories with the College of Law of a quality instructor.

"I guess I'd call it a pleasant career," smiled Professor Butler as he relaxed at his desk and looked back over his more than 30 years on the Willamette Law faculty. "I've seen the college grow and I've been a part of it. It's been very satisfying."

When Professor Butler arrived on the scene in 1949, he was one of only four full-time faculty members in the School of Law. That meant teaching "just about everything," and doing a little of everything that goes into building a successful program. Butler dabbled in promotion and recruiting as well as his full slate of teaching duties in those early years. It paid off in growth.

Professor Butler's first graduating class in 1950 had all of 22 people. He's seen those numbers improve to well over 100 per year. It's a tribute to the work of Butler, John Paulus and the rest of the "pioneer faculty" in the College of Law as well as the current administration.

"We had to do some promoting and make some visits along with the Dean back then but he (the Dean) wanted it that way. He enjoyed taking us along to help in terms of admissions," laughs Butler.

"Seward Reese was Dean then and he was really the guiding force behind the growth. He had a knack for promotion and recruiting. People like John Paulus and I gave it some stability."

Stable it was and stable it is. Professor Butler taught out of Gatke Hall for 18 years before moving to the new building in 1967.

"Oh, I remember those days at Gatke, especially the early days when the student numbers weren't as great. Everyone knew everyone... students, professors... and we all talked. We'd meet at a coffee shop run by an old fellow who was really sold on the Law School."

"I remember that when coffee prices started to go up (from a nickel to a dime), he kept them at five cents for the law students. He'd even loan them money when things looked like they would get tight financially. He was really interested."

Things could get hectic in the early years just as they can now. Professor Butler remembers the pressures. "I taught more courses then and some courses we had to offer every other year. We even combined second and third-year courses."

The "flood gates" began to open gradually and right up to the outpour of interest in law, Butler noted the steady growth at Willamette.

"I think we had a consistent growth rate and then all of a sudden everyone became interested in a law degree or at least it seemed like it. We used to have only one or two women in each class. Things have changed a lot in that respect."

Some things don't change, however, and the students fit into that category as far as Professor Butler is concerned. "The students are different in some respects but the quality is the same. Their appearances change over the years (Professor Butler remembers a series of years when "everyone had a mustache") but not the calibre."

The students provide the strongest memories for Professor Butler. Not all of them positive. "I was sued in 1969 along with the University and two other faculty members (named as Richard Roe and John Doe in the suit) for $450,000, claiming we had conspired to keep a student from becoming a lawyer."

"I went on sabbatical and when I came back the suit had been dropped. Still, it was a little startling to pick up the morning paper and start reading about a lawsuit and find your own name figuring prominently."

It provided an interesting memory but there were plenty of good ones through the years as well. Professor Butler remembered the 1959-60 Moot Court team which won the national championship in competition held in New York City, but even more fond a memory comes from "just seeing former students do well."

There are a lot of former students doing well, just as the Willamette College of Law is doing well.

"I think the great compensation for my years here is seeing the school grow. That's very satisfying to me," smiles Professor Butler. "I think we are in great shape right now and we have a fine Dean in Lee Tornquist. I hope he stays a long time. We have a good, strong Dean and a good, strong faculty. And I think a fine future."

Professor Butler and his wife Dorothy will follow that future from their new home in Waldport, where the longtime Willamette instructor will "do some beachcombing and gardening," along with teaching, two of his great loves.

There will be satisfaction on the coast. While following Willamette's "fine future," Professor Ted Butler will rest assured, knowing his 30-plus years of service were instrumental in shaping that future.

Ten-week search brings 32-year stay

If Henrietta (Hank) Althoff has seemed to be a fixture at Willamette for 32 years, it's not because she hasn't had an opportunity to stay anywhere else. She certainly didn't stay in one place very long while serving as a flight nurse in the Air Force from 1943 to 1946.

Captain Althoff was on the move constantly, flying from Paris to New York City and elsewhere to stateside hospitals. She said she probably has been in almost every airport city in the United States, but, in many of the cities, only in the airport. Her job was to care for the sick and wounded military personnel while they were in flight.

Born in Nebraska and raised in South Dakota, Hank wound up at the University of Minnesota, where she studied nursing. After several years in a St. Paul hospital, she went into the service. In 1946 in Paris, Hank ran into an Air Corps engineer named Ernie Althoff. They were married in New York City in the fall of 1946 and, after enjoying the Big Apple for a year (plays, musicals, museums and such), they took off on a 10-week jaunt around the country to find a nice, quiet place to live—the perfect spot. They found Salem and that's been home ever since.

Hank was hired by the late Dr. Ralph Purvine, becoming the first nurse at the University. She has stayed on to see the University with more nurses, a medical doctor, a consulting psychiatrist and, now, a full student development staff with counseling, housing and other personnel all under one roof.

The first roof Hank was under wasn't the current Bishop Health Center. Before that structure was built in 1955, the health center was an H-shaped building located about where the west lawn of Belknap is. Women were bedded down on one leg of the "H" and men on the other. Hank's office was situated on the crosspiece of the "H" where she said—facetiously, we think—that her main task was to see that no one crossed over from one section to the other.

Of all her nursing experiences on campus, Hank recalls best the flu epidemic—her first contact with what has come to be known as the Hong Kong flu. The epidemic on campus overran the health center, so little hospitals were set up in the dorms with the doctor making the rounds. She is still reminded that the three-week emergency resulted in an unpopular decision to cancel the homecoming dance.

Hank's scrapbook, given to her at a 25th anniversary gathering seven years ago, has photos of many people revered in Willamette's history. Dr. Purvine, John Lewis, Les Sparks, Ted Ogdahl, Jerry Whipple, Herb and Eugenia Smith, Jim and Dorothy Corson, Mark Hatfield. She remembers Senator Hatfield as a fellow administrator—and Senator Robert Packwood as a student. But, Hank remembers many more than the revered and the famous. She fondly recalls the countless Willamette students she numbers among her friends.

Hank and Ernie were among the few faculty and staff couples to attend the recent Founders Day dance, at which the students appropriately asked her to say a few words. Hank enjoyed the task because she likes Willamette students. She puts it simply: "They're nice kids."

Hank Althoff has always been one of the big boosters of the nice kids. She's at basketball and football games. At concerts and recitals. She seldom misses a school theatre production. And, just for diversion, she usually shows up for the University Round-table sessions on Fridays.

It's bad news that Hank is retiring from Willamette, but there's also good news: though she and Ernie are selling their home on Hansen Avenue, they're staying in town—just moving to a smaller place. After all, they spent 10 weeks looking for the ideal city to live in.

Hank Althoff (left) and Bob Putnam, two of Willamette's most familiar faces over the years, will retire at the end of this academic year. Along with Ted Butler and Clarence Kraft, who are also stepping down after 30 years on the job, it adds up to 121 years of service to the University and the Salem community. The retirees are scheduled to be honored in a reception on Alumni Day (May 10) at 5:30 p.m. in the Mission Mill Museum.

Bob Putnam synonymous with Salem theatre

If Salem were to pick a person synonymous with theatre in the city, that person most likely would be Bob Putnam. In fact, the Mission Mill Museum Association's Pangyrus III awards committee did select Bob to be honored in 1974 for his contributions "to drama and dance" in Salem.

Professor Putnam did not come to his theatre prominence by accident. He graduated from Cornell College in Mt. Vernon, Iowa, and later studied speech and radio at the University of Wisconsin, receiving a master's degree there. Before that, he spent three years in the apprentice program of the prestigious Cleveland Playhouse. In Cleveland, he got lots of experience but no money. Bob also studied a year toward a doctorate at Stanford University—a leave that represented the only time away from Willamette in his 27 years on the staff. He never has had a sabbatical—in part because he was a one-person department for most of his years here. As head of the theatre department, his first staff help came in 1971 when he had a part-time person.

Though Bob has done some teaching at Wisconsin, Knox College and Stanford, most of his classroom efforts and work with theatre students has been at Willamette. In his 27 years—he came in 1953—he has taught acting, directing, theatre history and the technical aspects. Right now, he devotes much of his time to construction of scenery.

Though many on campus have never seen Bob perform, he is indeed an actor.

He recalls a role recently in the Pentacle's anniversary production of Noel Coward's "Blithe Spirit." And one can rummage through old issues of the Oregon Statesman and Capital Journal and see Bob's photo as director of this or actor in that.

Bob's name has been associated with the Pentacle, Salem's community theatre, almost from its inception. In the summer of 1954—at the conclusion of his first year at Willamette—he was appointed the first director at the Pentacle and was its only director for two years.

Long the master of theatre at Willamette, Bob's favorite is the master playwright of them all: Shakespeare. One of the roles he has played is the title role in "King Lear."

Bob hasn't stuck strictly to the dramatic roles as he also is a singer. In fact, he currently is a member of the choir at the First Methodist Church in Salem.

Bob and his wife, Jeannette, also a graduate of Cornell College, have three children, all living in Portland, the youngest a student at Portland State University.

Bob Putnam has been a member of the Northwest Drama Conference and has been active for many years in Theta Alpha Phi, a national drama honorary in which he has held various offices. That and his contributions at the Pentacle have been noteworthy; still, he deserves a curtain call most of all for 27 years of commitment to theatre at Willamette.

Kraft surveys 30 years at Willamette

From his office on second floor Walton, Professor Clarence Kraft can survey many of the changes he's seen take place on the Willamette campus since he began teaching Spanish at the University in 1950. He admitted he doesn't survey the differences very often but he did take a moment to remember recently, in the wake of his coming retirement at the end of the current semester.

"Changes? I guess there have been a lot but mostly physical. Students don't really change all that much," observed the relaxed Kraft as he gazed at the activity in the quad. "I can remember when the campus ended at the railroad tracks. Beyond that it was all jungle."

It was a mild case of "jungle" fever that kept Clarence Kraft and Willamette together for the past 30 years (taking out two for military duty in the Army during the Korean conflict). The jungle has sprouted into an impressive campus as only the railroad tracks remind Professor Kraft of the "old days."

The memories still exist for the native Montanan, whose family gave up the Rockies and Kalispel for the Willamette Valley when Kraft was just 15. He's been an Oregonian ever since and Salem and Willamette are home.

Rattling off the names of the buildings which sprouted up around him, Kraft pointed to Doney, Smith Auditorium and the Health Center, to Sparks Center, which used to be a Copeland Lumber Yard and to Putnam University Center and the sororities and fraternities that replaced the "jungle" of the '50s. And he remembered the students and the changes.

"It's not really the students who change, it's the times," he noted. "It was a more close-knit campus in the old days. That was because it was a smaller student body and things were more traditional."

Kraft smiled as he remembered some of the student pranks. "I guess there was more good-natured horseplay in my earlier years here. I remember when students reconstructed a covered wagon in the middle of the floor when we were teaching out of the top floor of Eaton. When we came in one morning it was just there. They blocked the President's office door with a Volkswagen Beetle once, too."

He also recalled a time when students would "fill up the stairwells with chairs all the way to the top floors." The only way for removal would be to climb a fire escape and clear the chairs starting from the top floor. It put a damper on morning classes.

"All of those kinds of pranks were harmless really and I think it tied in with the fact that fewer students had access to cars. Their energies were directed toward campus."

It was a close relationship between students and instructors and it's the kind of relationship Professor Kraft has always had with his students.

"It's the nature of the subject I teach," says Kraft. "You have to have personal contact and now our classes are smaller because foreign language isn't required anymore. It makes for a good one-to-one relationship between the student and the instructor."

It's the kind of friendly relationship that Kraft enjoys.

"That's probably what I'll miss the most. The contact with the students every day. But I won't be entirely cut off from the campus with my retirement. I still plan to live in Salem and I know I'll keep close tabs on things."

Professor Kraft, who attended both Oregon State and Oregon (graduating from the latter), has become a Willamette Valley mainstay. He is proud of the fact that his three children all graduated from Willamette ("they all came here of their own volition") and he has also seen three of his former students return to the University as administrators and instructors.

Former News Bureau Director Bob Woodle and Professors Sue Leeson and Russ Beaton were all students of Professor Kraft before rejoining the University.

"It's been a good 30 years. I have enjoyed working with my colleagues and I have enjoyed the cooperation of my students. I've been in this part of the country since I was 15... it's home now."

Gardening, travel and fishing all figure into Professor Kraft's plans and he's looking forward to a little leisure time. A return trip to Spain, Mexico and Central America is likely, even though he has been in each area several times as a student, teacher and vacationer. Add some fishing trips to the Santiam ("I don't have a boat or anything... I'm a trout fisherman") and some relaxing moments gardening and Professor Kraft intends to keep busy.

"I really don't think I will be suffering to find things to do," he smiles. "We (he and his wife Millie) are going to keep busy."

Professor Kraft is counting on Willamette to keep busy as well.

"The future looks like a sound one. It's been able to maintain a strong student body for a lot of years and I don't see that changing in the future."

It's a future molded by the likes of Clarence Kraft. A survey of 30 years of service will tell you that.

ON THE SCENE

CINDY PEMBERTON

A 10-week observation paid off for Cindy Pemberton, who spent that period of time taking in the habits and behavior of the Humboldt penguin. As a result of her research on the tropical penguins from Peru, the Willamette senior has had her senior project accepted to appear in "Zookeeper's Forum."

Having her project published is certainly a highlight but the versatile Willamette student from Medford will also have the added distinction of delivering a 12-minute presentation of the paper to the 1980 meeting of the Western Psychological Association in Hawaii. Also a talented swimmer who earned All-American honors in four events during the season, Cindy is a lab assistant for Professor William Devary's Comparative Psychology class. She is currently implementing a plan similar to her penguin research for studying campus ducks in hopes of helping the population survive.

DOUGLAS PAN

One of the few scholars admitted into the United States from the People's Republic of China, Douglas Pan is the first undergraduate student from that nation to attend a university in this country since the Chinese Revolution. Born in Scotland, Pan, 23, has lived in Peking since 1964 and has attended the Foreign Language Institute and also worked for the China Travel Service as a tour guide.

Doug's expenses are being provided for by relatives in Portland and Berkeley, California since he receives no money from the Chinese government. At Willamette, Doug's first-year courses include computer science, calculus, English and political science. Doug began his studies in January.

RICHARD WILTSHIRE

Acting on an ad discovered by his wife in Saturday Review, Willamette French professor Richard Wiltshire put one of his many talents to use and entered the Third Annual Imitate Ernest Hemingway contest, sponsored by Harry's Bar and American Grill in Florence, Italy. It proved a good action. Professor Wiltshire's short story satire, "The Short Hapless Life of Robert Wilson," boosted by the approval of Hemingway's son, Jack, was awarded first place in the field which included 2,400 entries.

Wiltshire's efforts won him a trip for two to Florence for dinner at Harry's Bar and American Grill (where else?). Wiltshire, who also doubles as a free-lance writer and actor (he's Sherlock Holmes in the TV commercials for Oregon Fryers), had some stiff competition in the field, including Leon Uris, who entered under a false name but failed to make the list of 28 finalists. Oh yes, it took Wiltshire less than an hour to complete his winning entry.

BRUCE
STROM

Two conference paper presentations will highlight an active two months for Willamette Professor of Education Bruce Strom. His paper, "Influence of Course Structure on Student Affect: The Structural Affect Hypothesis," co-authored by Dennis Hocevar, Assistant Professor of Education at the University of Southern California, will be presented at the American Educational Research Association meeting in Boston, April 10.

Professor Strom's busy calendar will be full in May as well, when he attends the annual meeting of the Western Psychological Association in Honolulu from May 5-9. At the conference, Professor Strom will present another paper, "Pre-delinquent Adolescent Perceptions of Self, Authority, and Law and Order Following a Police-Directed Outdoor Education Camp Experience." The paper was co-authored by Gayre Christie and Barry Dart, lecturers in psychology at Kelvin Grove College of Advanced Education, Brisbane, Queensland, Australia.

LESLIE WICKMAN

Combining scholarship, athletic talent and campus involvement, Willamette senior Leslie Wickman has been named Outstanding Senior by the American Association of University Women. A senior from Seaside, Leslie is a political science major and has also been active in both track and basketball. She also helped organize the Fellowship of Christian Athletes group on campus.

The senior has traveled extensively in England, France and the Soviet Union and has interned in the Department of State in Washington, D.C. A member of O.D.K., a national leadership honor society on campus, Leslie served as vice president of the Willamette chapter. The AAUW Senior Woman Recognition Award recognizes scholarship, character, personality, contributions to campus and community, and achievement in its selection.

KERRY TYMCHUK

Newly-elected President of the Associated Students of Willamette University, Kerry Tymchuk, will take over the duties of current president Liz Geiger. A junior majoring in speech and history, Tymchuk had previously served as treasurer of the student body. He will hold the position of president for one year.

Tymchuk, from Reedsport, will join other newly-elected student body officers—John Dolese, Anchorage, Alaska (vice-president), Pamela Munger, Anchorage, Alaska (secretary), and Anne Foote, Olympia, Washington (treasurer)—in leading the Willamette student government.

SUE RAUCH

Sue Rauch, a former Willamette student and Admissions Counselor, returned to Willamette in February, rejoining the Admissions Staff. A 1975 graduate of Willamette, Ms. Rauch served as an Admissions Counselor for nearly two years before moving on to Carroll College in Waukesha, Wisconsin.

At Carroll, Sue has served as Admissions Counselor, Acting Dean of Admissions and Associate Dean of Admissions. Sue, who also has a Certificat Pratique de Langue Francaise from Universite de Caen in France, brings extensive experience with her on her return to Oregon and Willamette. She will handle recruiting duties in Nevada, Utah and Arizona as well as Oregon, Washington and California.

A 'PLUMB' DELIGHTFUL SEASON

There's an old baseball song that former St. Louis Cardinal Hal Smith composed back when the Cards were always a game or two away from a pennant. He called it, "Purt Near, But Not Plumb." That's "purt near" the way one could sum up Willamette's winter athletic season. But not "plumb."

The 'Cat teams were riddled with team and individual successes but were just a half-step away from total dominance. Maybe less than half a step.

You could look right at Jim Brik's swimming program which yielded two national champions, conference titles for both men's and women's competition, and a district crown for the women, and you can see that there were no "purt nears" involved in the 'Cat swimming season. It was all "plumbs."

Steve Koga claimed the national NAIA title in the 100 freestyle with a blazing 46.57 time as the WU squad picked up a strong ninth place in the meet held in Allegheny, PA. Koga was also second in the 50 free and third in the 100 butterfly to cap a solid individual performance by the sophomore.

Rod Cook and Randy Randolph also were able to place in the national competition for the Bearcat men.

For the women, Dawn Lien capped a solid season with a national title in the 200 butterfly with a 2:12.45 time in the AIAW Division III competition also in Allegheny, PA.

Cindy Pemberton placed in four events during the national meet and Kim Clarkson added another individual place in the 200 backstroke. Pemberton's efforts earned her All-American honors in four events.

In all, eight Bearcat swimmers were awarded All-American notice. Joining the individual placers on the AA team were Eric Doering, Marie Wright and Susan Thompson, who swam legs of the 'Cat relay teams, which also proved powerful in the national competition.

While the Willamette swimmers were "plumb" terrific, the Bearcat basketball teams were "purt near" as good. Under the first-year coach Rich Glas, WU's men nailed down a third-place finish in the Northwest Conference and were in the running for a District II playoff berth right down to the final game of the season. The race, like many a Bearcat game, went right to the wire before the Willamette five were passed over.

Glas took his team to a 12-13 overall season mark and take away a couple of last-second baskets by Pacific and George Fox, and turn around two narrow losses to Linfield, and the 'Cats could have had that playoff spot. Still, the season hardly lacked for excitement.

National competition spices winter sports

Willamette shot at better than a 50 percent clip from the field for the year and provided plenty of offensive punch for the fans. Led by NWC All-Star Jeff Novitsky, who hit at a 16.9 clip, the 'Cat attack averaged more than 70 points a game.

Though Novitsky's scoring stood out, there was plenty of balance to go around. Center Mike Gilson was a second-team NWC All-Star and shot at a 60 percent clip from the floor, while averaging more than 12 points a game. Add nifty passing and double-figure scoring from slick guard Rob Cantonwine and strong inside play from Dan Vipond, who also scored in two digits on the year, and there was plenty to cheer about.

For Fran Howard's Willamette women's team there was also a lot to cheer about. The lady 'Cats earned a fifth-place District finish and an at-large berth in the AIAW Division III playoffs with a fine 19-6 record for the year.

Willamette lost out on a WCIC title as Linfield stopped the 'Cats in a playoff game at George Fox. Still, the trip to La Mirada, CA, for the playoff was a bonus for the Bearcat women.

In California, Willamette ran up against a strong Biola team and fell 84-51, but even that loss couldn't dim the successful season.

Sophomore forward Vangie Warren earned first-team WCIC All-Star honors, leading the 'Cats in rebounding and averaging eight points a game. The high-scoring WU backcourt duo of Brenda Hansen and Barbara Canda each earned second-team honors. Hansen was the leading Willamette scorer at nearly 15 points a game and Canda was scoring at better than a 13 ppg clip at season's end.

Willamette's wrestlers ended a season of promise with their first-ever victory in the national meet at Fort Hays, Kansas. Freshman ace Tim Martin picked up a first-round victory in the 134-pound class to pace the Bearcats in the NAIA nationals, but he lost a close decision in the second round and was eliminated at that point.

Another freshman, Jeff Southwell, also competed for Vern Petrick's successful wrestlers but he was stopped in the opening round of the competition.

Martin and junior heavyweight Randy Osler each collected second-place district finishes in competition held on the Bearcat mats. Southwell won the consolation title in that tournament.

The 'Cat matmen finished third in the Northwest Conference meet behind always-powerful Pacific and strong PLU.

The wrestlers, like the rest of the Willamette winter athletes, were "purt near" the cream of the crop in the Northwest and with a bevy of returnees expected back in all sports, 1980-81 looks like an even better winter for the Bearcats and their followers. In fact, it could be "plumb" beautiful.

DAWN LIEN AND STEVE KOGA

Willamette's swim season was topped off by a super showing at national competition in Allegheny, PA where both men's and women's teams placed well. The real story was in the individual efforts of the Bearcat swimmers, who had nine All-Americans after the national competition. Leading the way were two individual national champions, Steve Koga and Dawn Lien.

Koga topped the nation in the 100 freestyle, winning the sprint in a swift 46.57 time. The talented Bearcat tanker just missed a second title in the 50 free, where he placed second and he added a third place finish as well in the 100 butterfly. Lien set a national record in the 200 butterfly to capture her crown in 2:12.45.

TIM MARTIN

Only a freshman, Tim Martin of Boise, Idaho, became the first Willamette wrestler in history to win a match at the NAIA National Tournament, held this year in Fort Hays, Kansas. Martin, who placed second in the District II competition held on the Willamette mats, came up with a first round victory but dropped his second round battle against PLU's Giovannini by a 9-4 decision.

Martin wrestled at 134 pounds for the 'Cats, who also sent Salem freshman Jeff Southwell to Fort Hays. Southwell, who was third in the District II competition, lost in the first round at nationals and was eliminated from the meet. The Willamette matmen turned in a solid year, however, finishing third in Northwest Conference action and fifth in the District.

VANGIE WARREN

WCIC coaches honored Willamette forward Vangie Warren for her hustle and consistency, naming her to the first team All-Star team for 1979-80. The sophomore leaper from Portland was the dominant Bearcat force on the backboards averaging more than eight rebounds a game and she added an 8.0 scoring clip to that stat total.

Her solid individual efforts helped Willamette earn an at-large berth in the AIAW Division III playoffs where the 'Cats were defeated by Biola College of La Mirada, California in the first round. Warren got solid offensive support from both Barbara Canda and Brenda Hansen, who earned second team honors in WCIC play.

JEFF NOVITSKY

Piling up points all season long, Jeff Novitsky led the Willamette varsity basketball team in scoring and rebounding over the season, averaging 16.9 points an outing and hauling down 171 rebounds as the 'Cats finished at 12-13 for the year. Novitsky gained All-Northwest Conference first team honors for the second straight season and was also named to the District II Honorable Mention list.

The talented senior from Portland's Madison High School pumped in 26 points in his farewell appearance for the Bearcats in a losing cause against PLU and earned a standing ovation from the crowd for his career contributions after fouling out of the game.

CLASS NOTES

Edited by
Theresa Primbs
Alumni Records Secretary

1916

Walter S. Gleiser retired after 50 years of active membership in the Oregon and Pacific Northwest Conferences of the United Methodist Church. His pastorates included Newberg, Pendleton, Tacoma, Walla Walla and Chehalis. He also served as superintendent of the Spokane district from 1940 to 1946. In Chehalis, he has been a director of the Lewis Federal Savings & Loan Assoc. for 21 years and vice-president for 15 years. Since retirement in 1964, he has preached regularly at the Rydenwood Community Church.

1923

Dr. John and Esther ('26) Brougher will be attending the unveiling of Mother Joseph in Statuary Hall, Washington, D.C., on May 1, 1980. Dr. Brougher will represent the Fort Vancouver Historical Society at the dedication ceremony. "We shall be happy to see you on May 10."

1928

Rev. Robert G. Witty is the president of Luther Rice Seminary in Jacksonville, FL.

1929

'29-ers: How about a repeat reunion at the Illahe, May 10, at noon? And another get-together with Ivan White at Mary Eyre's at 5:30 on Friday, the night before? If you plan to be with us for either or both, please let Jean Potts know, for reservations and plans, at 6780 Huntington Circle S.E., Salem, 97302.

Here are some items from the Class of 1931:

Judge Sam Bowe ('31, L'33) retired Feb. 19 from his position as Josephine County Circuit Court Judge in Grants Pass, OR. He and his wife, Mildred Miller ('32), have made their home there since 1938. On April 1, 1965, he was appointed to the position of Judge by Governor Mark Hatfield and he has served in that position for 15 years. He always ran unopposed in subsequent elections. The Bowes plan to continue living in Grants Pass.

Fritz and Grace Henderson DeHarpport have just returned from a trip to the Holy Lands where they had some eye-opening experiences. They attended church services on Christmas Eve in Bethlehem, and there were 15,000 people crowded into Manger Square. They were frisked numerous times by armed Israeli soldiers because of the great fear of the terrorists. When they were in Cairo, Egypt, their hotel was just one block from the American and English Embassies, and there were armed soldiers everywhere and sand-bagged entrances to the Embassies. They returned home from those troubled lands with great affection for America.

Note to our Classmates of 1931:
Please be thinking about our 50th Class Reunion in just one more year! It is customary to make a contribution to the School, so let's have some ideas about that.

1933

Bernice Rickman Gordon writes that she enjoyed reunions with Willamette Univ. friends on a recent trip to the West Coast: Melvin and Louisa Crow in Lostine, OR. Warner and Ethel Crow and Edyth Glaisyer Hill in Yachats, Dorothy Rose

Marcy in Oceanside, CA, Earl and Virginia Henry, Marjorie O'Dell Morgan in San Leandro, CA.

Ronald Hewitt and his wife are leaving Pensacola, FL, where they have been visiting their daughter and grandson and are proceeding to Houston, TX, for a visit with their son, Dr. Roger Hewitt, and four granddaughters prior to returning to Salem.

Ross Knotts has officially retired from the ministry, but continues serving as pastor of Gold Hill and Upper Rogue United Methodist Churches. He received his B.D. from Drew University in 1937, and since then has served churches in Odell, Portland, Bend, Ashland, Springfield, and Medford. Ross and his wife live in Eagle Point. They have two children and one grandchild.

Alice Wiens Lewis and her husband, Art, live in Olympia, WA. They have three children and three grandchildren. Alice was the last member of the class that one would expect to get mixed up with crime, but she went from W.U. to the state reform school for girls (now called Hillcrest) where she taught for three years. She has also taught women in the penitentiary in Walla Walla, but most of her career as a teacher was along more conventional lines. At present Alice is enjoying church and community volunteer work, but says her special joy is in taking music lessons.

Following graduation from W.U. Gene Smith earned a B.D. at Drew and a Ph.D. from New York University. He has served pastorates in New York and New Jersey, been General Secretary of the World Council of Churches. At present he spends two days a week as a counselor at a clinic sponsored jointly by the Catholic and Methodist Parishes in Totowa, NJ. Gene and his wife live in Closter, NJ. They have two daughters and two grandchildren.

Miles Woodworth moved from Boston to King City, OR, after retiring in 1978 as a Consulting Fire Protection Engineer. He continues to do some consulting work when it doesn't interfere with golf and fishing.

After living the many years in Hillsboro where Jim practiced law and they reared their two daughters, Jim and Martha Warren Burdett retired in August, 1978, and moved to their mountain home in Trout Lake Valley, WA, at the base of Mt. Adams. They are now enjoying an area that offers things they love—fishing, gardening, reading, traveling and hunting, with a bit of wood cutting too. Daughter Pat Siegner lives on a ranch in southeast Oregon. While there, riding horseback and searching for Indian artifacts with the five grandchildren is enjoyed. Daughter Sharon and her husband, Don Oenesci, live in Princeton where he teaches architecture and they have one daughter. Martha writes that she has been a content homemaker and enjoys advantages of not working outside her home. She paints in oils and watercolors. Last October she had a show in the Hillsboro Library. For 15 years she worked with American Field Service and kept many students in her home. She also worked three years with grade schools in special education and plans to do this in their new area. Last December they enjoyed a trip to India, Nepal and Lanka.

Louise Anderson Vernon writes that she has just been given the "go-ahead" from her editor to go to Czechoslovakia this summer to do on-the-spot research for "Gooseboy Reformer," the story of John Huss, who died in 1415. In September, 1980, "The Kings Book" will be coming out. It is the 13th of the Reformation series—advertised by her Mennonite publishers as "history comes alive." Louise is currently teaching three classes in creative writing and has 21 piano students in San Jose.

After 30 years in the Midwest, Bruce and Ruth Yocom Carkin ('39) are happy to be back on the West Coast. They are living in Sacramento, CA, where Bruce is the Western Accounts Manager for General Radiator but will be retiring March 1, 1980.

1940

Betty Williams Zumwalt has just returned to Oregon after 17 years in Tucson, AZ, where her husband, Deryl, retired as Division Engineer for Southern Pacific Co. They now reside in Tualatin, OR.

1941

Dr. Everett E. Wilcox has retired after serving for 15 years as Supt. of California School for Blind. He and Frances have moved to their new home in the Berkeley area.

1944

Richard W. Espey is a realtor with Realty World in Salem, OR.

1945

Mary E. Bennett has completed 10 years as coordinator of Physical Therapy Program at California State Univ., Northridge. She also has completed five years' service with the State of California Physical Therapy Examining Committee. She makes her home in Los Angeles, CA.

Rev. Dr. William B. Cate is president-director of the Church Council of Greater Seattle. He recently gave an address at St. Mark's Episcopal Cathedral on the state of the church in the Pacific Northwest.

Eunice Massee Mitchell still lives on a ranch west of Junction City, OR, where she has been a mail carrier for 10 years. Her husband is a heavy equipment operator for Lane Plywood.

Dorothy Kenney Johnson has changed jobs. She is now with the U.S. Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation and makes her home in Washington, D.C.

1947

Velle Felton Linegar is a bookkeeper for Treasure Valley Community College in Ontario, OR.

Margaret Geisler Shipmen writes that her 14 kids have so far yielded 14 grandkids. She is now with a mission school on a 5,000-mile trip by school bus from Tacoma, WA, to Juarez, Mexico, with "Bibles for Mexico." Her home is in Everett, WA.

Jack I. Watson is employed at the Washington Soldiers Home as the Community Resources Coordinator, handling public relations, photography and volunteer programs. He resides in Orting, WA, and continues as an active scuba diver.

Geraldine (Geri) Bowles Olsen is completing her second year as president of the Northern Virginia Alumnae Club of Pi Beta Phi. In June of 1979, the club received the Ideal Alumnae Club Award at the convention in Phoenix. The selection was made from among 339 alumnae clubs throughout the nation. The group also received the award for the Outstanding Yearbook among clubs of membership of 100 or more. Geri also serves as recording secretary of the Mamie Eisenhower Republican Women's Club of Oakton, VA, and as a representative from The Holton-Arms School in Maryland to the Parents' Council of Washington, D.C.

Terry Murray and his wife, Margaret, reside in Albany, OR, where Terry is the assistant principal of West Albany High School. He also directs the First Congregational Church choir in Salem.

1952

Joan Haberle Widmer and husband, Leon, are living in Albany, OR. Leon sells real estate with the firm of Tripp & Tripp. They have two married daughters, one a music teacher in public schools and another teaching in elementary education. Daughter number three, Susie, is a sophomore at W.U. and is a third generation W.U. student. Sue wrote the freshman class Glee song last year. She is a cheerleader and swam for W.U. last year at the National Small College meet.

Shirley Griffin Jacobs' husband, Del, was promoted to Brig. General in July and in September they moved to Andrews AFB, MO, where he is the Deputy for Plans and Programs for the Air Force Systems Command. They have three children in college and the youngest is a junior in high school.

Amaryllis Lilles Powell is an elementary music coordinator and elementary band director for Tigard schools. Her husband, Dick, is also a music teacher for Tigard Senior High School and serves as a Reserve Captain in the Coast Guard Reserve. They have five children: Leslie (22) graduating from OSU in Music, Chris (21) who is in the Coast Guard, Donald (16), David (12) and Mary (8).

Patricia Faber Stratton is now living in Eugene, OR, where she is supervisor of the business office for the Eugene Register-Guard.

T. Edwin Whyte is chairman of the Engineering Department at Wayne Community College in Goldsboro, NC.

Judy Finch Cooper reports she's busy as Director of the Salem-Dallas Family Head Start program.

Rev. Jacqueline Meadows is now pastor of the Central United Methodist Church in Sacramento. Son Eric is a freshman at Willamette this year.

Also late last year came news that Eileen Susbauer Zielinski had been named by Oregon Governor Vic Atiyeh to the State Board of Agriculture for a four-year term. Duties include advising the State Board of Agriculture director and assisting in determining the department's policies.

Sweet Home, OR, is home for Rev. Lawrence Monk and wife, Linda, as he's pastor of the Sweet Home United Methodist Church.

Barbara Machada is ambitious as ever. She's Director of Community Services for St. Joseph Hospital in Fullerton, CA, and

Boyd, Frewing to receive honorary degrees

Dr. William B. Boyd and H. Leslie Frewing, M.D., will be honored at the 1980 Willamette University commencement ceremonies with honorary degrees as recommended by the joint Trustees, Faculty, Administration, and Students Committee on Honorary Degrees.

Dr. Boyd, Ph.D. and President of the University of Oregon in Eugene, will be the speaker at the 1980 commencement, May 11. Dr. Frewing is a Willamette graduate in the class of 1931 and is currently residing in Bend, Oregon.

Dr. Boyd will be awarded the honorary degree: Doctor of Letters. Dr. Frewing, who has been a leading surgeon in Vancouver, Washington and has twice led medical teams to Malaysia, where he was Medical Director for the Mangla Dam contractors, will be awarded the honorary degree: Doctor of Humanities.

she's gone back to school—to Claremont College Executive Management master's program.

Shirley (Rice) and Dave Shearer wrote from Redmond, OR, they'd enjoyed a marvelous holiday in Hawaii, then returned home for skiing season.

Elizabeth and Dick Lewis left the rigors of New York City for a three-week jaunt to England followed by another three weeks backpacking in the woods of Maine!

And your NewsCat is busy also—editing a company magazine, speech-writing and preparing PR releases and setting up a brand new archives for her company—all delightful projects. (That's why there was nothing about '55 in the last newsletter!)

Come to the 25th reunion in May to catch up on the news first-hand!

Rev. Thomas Murdock was recently appointed to the State Board of Funeral Directors and Embalmers for a four-year term. The board's duties include making and enforcing rules and regulations relating to the practice of funeral directing and embalming. Rev. Murdock is the rector of Emmanuel Episcopal Church in Coos Bay, OR. He is also president of the board of directors of Bay Area Hospital.

Rev. Glen and Shirley Witters Murray ('56) reside in Honolulu, HI. Glen is with the Hawaii District of the United Methodist Church and was elected to the 1980 General Conference of the United Methodist Church. Shirley is currently Director of Kihohana United Methodist Preschool.

John K. Bowker is the owner of Oranges, Lemons, Avocados, KOA in Porterville, CA.

Rev. Alan and Dorothy Hudson Mackillop ('62) are living in El Cajon, CA. Alan is the rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church in La Mesa. He assumed the new post in October, 1979, after eight years in Mahopac, NY.

Terry Ziegelman with his wife, Caludia, and children, Kendra and Kyle, has moved to Pocatello, ID. Terry is general manager of the Ox Bow Motor Inn, which has 184 rooms, 64 apartments, restaurant, lounge and two pools.

LoAnne Munding Johnson wrote late last year to say she's now Box Office Manager for the new $3½ million Civic Theatre in the city of La Mirada, CA.

Well, it's time to dust off the old red Wal-lah and get caught up on names and faces. Our ten-year reunion is scheduled for the weekend of May 10: mark your calendars!

Deep in my stack of papers I found a note about Jeanna Reeves Sebald. Sorry, Jeanna, to have taken so long with this. Jeanna is practically a neighbor. She lives in Kirkland with her husband, who is an engineer, and their two daughters.

Bonnie Hansen Hawkins is studying early childhood development—at home, with son Joseph, born October 3. She says it's quite a change from teaching junior high school for eight years. Her husband, John, works for Portland Distributing Company; they live in the Eastmont area of Portland.

David Taylor is working on a Ph.D. at the Queens University in Belfast, Northern Ireland. He's in his second year, doing research for a dissertation on Protestant extremism.

Levi Weins and his wife, Ruby, live in Hillsboro, where he is an education specialist at Hillsboro Union High School.

Jeff and Karen Patch Albaugh live in Tacoma. Jeff is an Army doctor, working in the Department of Internal Medicine at Madigan Hospital.

Judy Woolsey Hansen might be nostalgic for an Oregon winter after the recent deluge in Arizona and surrounding areas. She, her husband, Jerry, and their two children, Kevin (9) and Amy (5), live in Tempe. Larry is a professor at ASU. Judy asks: "Where is Pam Murphy?"

Last, but never least, a note from Joe Much. Anyone who has oohed and aahed over the beautiful Marion County D.A.'s office can thank Joe—it's his design. He has entered private practice with Williams, Spooner & Graves, P.C., in Salem. He still plays drums and sings in a band on weekends, and just had a house built in Salem.

I've really enjoyed all the notes people have been sending—it's great to hear from you. I know there are more alums around, doing interesting things; hope to see you all at the reunion!

One advantage to this gusty February weather is that it has blown some of your news my way in time for publication.

Susan Meikle Stoops finds herself being constantly challenged in her job as a teacher for emotionally disturbed children in the Eugene-Springfield School District. Susan is now married to Jack Stoops, who is also a teacher.

Rick Fairbrook is making his home in Tigard, OR, with his wife, Sandi. Rick is now an assistant vice president for Lutz Development Co. of Portland, OR.

Kathy Spezza Scrivner and Gary are still making their home in Spokane, WA. This past year they have been busy putting finishing touches on their family room and tending a very abundant garden. When not busy canning their harvest, Kathy works part-time as a medical technologist and Gary works for Union Carbide.

From the W.U. crew in Salem, I have the following news:

Tim Reidy is a research analyst for the State of Oregon in the Employment Research and Statistics Dept. He and his wife, Kimberly, have two children.

I saw Joyce Hoehne Beach over the holidays and life is most definitely agreeing with her. She is enjoying being a first-time mother with daughter, Kristin. Joyce still has her interesting part-time job working for the real estate board.

Ron and Kathy Judson are ensconced in Salem where Ron is continuing the good name of Judson Plumbing Co. They have two small children.

Peggy Ringler Berglund and Al are enjoying their lovely new home in Sherwood, OR. Al is now an associate dean for Lewis and Clark Law School. When not busy chasing after Eric, 2½, and Bryn, 6 months, Peggy works as a part-time learning specialist in Aurora.

Peggy reports that she ran into Gretchen Gruver Hull at the pediatrician's (where else?). Gretchen and Gary have just moved to Tigard from Guam where Gary was a practicing attorney. They have two small children.

By news from Tucson—the stork arrived in time for Christmas and Linda Patrick Wright and Bruce were able to celebrate the holiday with their precious new daughter, Kristin. Bruce is campaign manager for Congressman Mo Udall's reelection and Linda is busily decorating their new home.

Doug Coats is living in Sacramento, CA, where he is Director for Operations for the Academy of Business College.

Bruce Beauchamp and his wife, Sherry, are living in the City of Stars—Hollywood, CA! Bruce is a law clerk for an attorney in Los Angeles.

Pam Forsch was recently promoted to personnel officer for United California Bank. She has been transferred to San Francisco and really loves living in the city by the Bay.

Mary McBride is living in Cleveland, OH, where she is a nurse and a student at Case Western Reserve.

That is all the news I can gather for this newsletter—please let me know of your comings and goings! Please return your alumni information cards to the University as they send any appropriate information on to me for publication.

Have a marvelous spring—after 10 years away from this weather, I had forgotten how beautiful a spring flower can look!

Renovation plans move ahead

Plans and fund-raising for Willamette's renovation and renewal program have moved ahead since the announcement in the October issue of the Willamette Scene.

At the February 15 meeting of the Board of Trustees, the University received approval to proceed to working drawings for the new University Library. This followed a presentation by President Robert P. Lisensky, who used slides of floor plans in explaining the architectural progress on the Library and the buildings to be renovated—Collins Hall, Eaton Hall, Waller Hall and the current Library/Walton Hall.

Current estimates place the cost of the 57,010-square-foot, three-story Library at $5.46 million; these figures include construction, equipment and furnishings and architectural fees. It is hoped the Library construction can begin in the fall of 1981 and be completed by December 31, 1983. The new Library will be located just west and slightly north of the Fine Arts Building. The Mill Race will be re-routed to flow around the south side of the structure.

The initial construction in the renovation and renewal program will be in Collins Hall and should start this summer. Gifts and pledges for the $3.3 million needed to renovate the science hall already have been received. Because there are no bearing walls in Collins, it will be possible to gut the entire inside to provide completely new labs, classrooms, faculty offices and other facilities. A new main entrance will open to the south onto the quad area. As the Scene went to press, the University was working on plans for handling science programs during the construction period.

The cost for the entire renovation and renewal project is still estimated at $15 million.

Boyd due at Commencement

Dr. William B. Boyd, 12th president of the University of Oregon, will be the speaker at the Willamette University commencement, May 11 at 3 p.m. at McCulloch Stadium in Salem.

Dr. Boyd, who became Oregon's chief executive on July 1, 1975, earned his A.B. degree from Presbyterian (S.C.) College in 1946, his M.A. degree from Emory (Ga.) University in 1947 and his Ph.D. degree in modern European history from the University of Pennsylvania in 1954.

Holding a long list of academic credentials, Boyd, 57, began his career in higher education as a faculty member at Michigan State University in 1953 after military service in the U.S. Navy.

Following his service at MSU, Dr. Boyd served as Dean of Faculty at Alma (Mich.) College from 1958 to 1965; Director of the Honors Program at Ohio State University, 1966 to 1968; and as President at Central Michigan from 1968 until taking the same position at the University of Oregon in 1975.

A native of South Carolina, Dr. Boyd has served on the Keast Commission on Academic Tenure; on the Advisory Council of the Danforth Associate Program for the Danforth Foundation; on the Governing Board of the Academic Collective Bargaining Information Service; as chairman of the Michigan state-based committee, National Endowment for the Humanities; and as vice president of the Michigan Academy of Science Arts and Letters.

He has been awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws degree from Presbyterian College. His memberships include Phi Beta Kappa, Phi Kappa Phi and Phi Alpha Theta.

Dr. Boyd is the co-author of two books, "The U.S. Navy Bureau of Ordnance in World War II" and "A Short History of Degaussing." He has also written published articles on student activism and collective bargaining.

Roy Ruffner steps down as Financial Affairs vice pres.

Roy A. Ruffner, Vice President for Financial Affairs at Willamette, announced his resignation effective at the end of April. Ruffner made the announcement in February and will leave his post at Willamette in order to accept an appointment at Tennessee Technological University in Cookeville, Tenn.

Dr. Ruffner, who has been at Willamette since 1978, will take over as Director of Business and Fiscal Affairs at Tennessee Tech. He and his family came to Salem in 1978 from Westminster College in Missouri, where he had served as Vice President of Fiscal Affairs for 12 years.

A graduate of Westminster College, Ruffner received his Ph.D. in Accountancy from the University of Missouri and his M.B.A. from Washington University.

Ruffner, 45, cited the opportunity for experience in the public sector of higher education and a strong family interest in returning to the Tennessee area as major factors in his leaving Willamette.

Maintenance votes for union

Willamette University has its first union.

On January 30, Willamette's maintenance employees voted 39-13 in favor of joining the Office and Professional Employees Union Local 11 (AFL-CIO). On the same day, clerical workers voted down joining that union 34-28. Fifty-two of the 53 maintenance workers participated in their ballot whereas 62 of 65 voted in the clerical decision.

Ray Naas, Director of Personnel, said that the current pay and benefit structure for maintenance workers will remain in force until a new one is negotiated.

Search begins

A 14-member Presidential Search and Screening Committee, approved by the Willamette Board of Trustees, has started the process for selection of Willamette's 20th president.

The committee, made up of four members of the Board of Trustees, four faculty members, two administration staff members, one alumna and three students representing Liberal Arts, Law and the Graduate School of Administration, has met twice to review candidates' files and decide how to proceed with the search.

Candidate applications closed March 31 and over 100 applicants responded. At the Search Committee's April 5 meeting, consensus was that there is a pool of qualified presidential candidates. It is the committee's hope to invite a small group of finalists to campus before the end of May.

The Presidential Search and Screening Committee members are William B. Webber, Amo DeBemardis, Joan McNamara and Loren Winterscheid, all Trustees; Earl Littrell (Atkinson Graduate School of Administration), Carlton Snow (College of Law), Sue Leeson (College of Liberal Arts) and George McCowen (College of Liberal Arts), all faculty members; Sam Hall and Frank Meyer, administration; David Goode, alumnus; and Kerry Tymchuk, Ron Knox and Walt Blackford, all students.

On June 10-13, the Oregon-Idaho Annual Conference of the United Methodist Church will be held on the Willamette campus.

BULLETIN BOARD

"I went to a Garden Party to reminisce with my old friends . . . a chance to share old memories and sing the songs again."

Rick Nelson — 1972

The song may be relatively new but the sentiment has been around forever. Willamette's "Garden Party" will be Alumni Day 1980, on May 10 and the chance to share old memories, sing old songs and reminisce with old friends—and even meet some new ones—is fuel for thought.

And if fuel is a problem, just remember the old days and think about the events on schedule for Alumni Day 1980. Even though gasoline prices are up (one more time) and some alumni may have to use ingenious means to come to the annual reunion gatherings and other festivities, the effort will be well worth it.

Events on tap include informative meetings, social sessions with opportunities to meet former classmates and professors and, of course, the traditional alumni banquet, which will feature Willamette president, Dr. Robert Lisensky, who will be stepping down as the University's leader on August 1 of this year.

There will be special reunion luncheons and a general alumni luncheon for those alumni not having a special get-together. There will be campus tours and an alumni dance in the Cat Cavern of the University Center. And you can stay over for the colorful commencement ceremony on Sunday, May 11. In short, the day will be long on activity.

To help support that activity and due to the dramatic costs involved in setting up events for Alumni Day, it was decided—regrettably—to incorporate a modest registration fee of $2 per person or $3 per family. In addition, registration information for reunion luncheons, campus housing and other activities is available by contacting the Willamette University Alumni Office (503) 370-6356.

And when the day arrives, you can be sure there will be plenty to do. Lots of sharing, lots of singing and certainly lots of reminiscing with friends, old and new.

Fraternity plans 20th anniversary

The Theta-Delta chapter of Kappa Sigma Fraternity is seeking fraternity alumni who are interested in helping with plans for the 20th anniversary of the house, scheduled for February of 1981.

Fraternity President Ken Yarnell ('81) asked that fraternity alumni, parents of members and friends of the fraternity who wish to help with the anniversary celebration should contact the college fraternity or Buzz Yocom, Director of Alumni Relations. Tentative plans call for an all-campus open house and a formal dinner-dance.

The fraternity also announced that plans are underway for the formation of a Parent's Club during the '80-'81 school years to help with 20th anniversary activities and to improve the relationship between the fraternity and parent members.

On-campus study due in July

"What in the world is going on?"

You've probably wondered that aloud many times. Willamette is using the question as a simple theme for its latest venture into continuing education. Open to all Willamette alumni, parents and friends, the Willamette University Alumni College will give some insights into that question as well as a few answers when it provides a summer of academic, cultural, social and recreational opportunities right here on campus.

The program is slated to begin July 27 and run for a week through August 2 at a cost of $175 for adults and $85 for children aged 5 to 14 (no children under five years old). The price includes room, board, books, tuition and day care for children. A commuter rate is also available at $95 and includes lunches, final dinner, tuition and books.

Those planning to stay on campus will reside in Doney Hall and arrival is planned for Sunday, July 27 with classes beginning the following morning.

A maximum enrollment of 60, including children, will be accepted for the week-long program and checks made payable to Willamette Alumni College will be accepted until July 1, 1980. Advance reservations may be secured with a deposit of $15 per person and will be honored in order of receipt.

Individual lecture sessions and joint faculty sessions will be offered by the faculty, who will include Professor Richard Gillis, Professor Richard Lord, Professor Carl Hall and Professor Marcia Springer.

A complete detailed schedule of activities will be mailed to all registrants. Those planning to attend should bring casual attire, a swimsuit and sports equipment as you wish. Those with special needs should write to Willamette Alumni College, Willamette University, Salem, Oregon 97301.

Day care facilities will be provided for children aged 5 to 14, who will be able to take advantage of Willamette's educational and recreational facilities. Activities for children will be coordinated by separate staff and will be separated from adult participants.

Anyone seeking further information concerning the program is asked to write to: R. A. Yocom, Willamette Alumni College, Willamette University, Salem, Oregon 97301.
