A Time to Celebrate Our Sesquicentennial

Jerry E. Hudson
President

THE 1991-92 YEAR was an extraordinary year of celebration at Willamette University. Our 150th anniversary caused us to reflect upon and rejoice in—even more than usual—the institution's distinguished heritage, and to affirm the depth, richness, and vitality of Willamette's roots.

Many of the Sesquicentennial Celebration activities were concentrated in Homecoming Weekend, Founders' Day Weekend, and Commencement Weekend. Numerous Willamette family reunions were held, bringing classes, artists, musicians, athletes, and majors back together to reminisce and to renew connections with friends and the University.

The sesquicentennial spirit of tribute and celebration was visibly evident on campus as banners and posters memorialized Willamette's 150-year vision. "for future generations," a commissioned sculpture was installed to recognize the important town-gown relationship between Salem and the University, a gliding dragon tree was planted near the five sequoia trees which were introduced 50 years prior as part of the institution's centennial celebrations, and a rose garden was added with 150 memorial plants. Off-campus, the Capitol rotunda served (thanks to the benevolence of our younger sister-institution, the State of Oregon) as the site for a spectacular Founders' Day Ball, and United States Post Offices sold millions of commemorative postal cards featuring historic Waller Hall.

The 1991-92 year was one recognizing and honoring those who have contributed to the progress of Willamette and to the development of the University's distinguished heritage—people like:

- Jason Lee, who modeled service and gave meaning to our motto, "Not Unto Ourselves Alone Are We Born."
- The Rev. Alvan Waller, who modeled perseverance and set an exceedingly high standard in working "for future generations."
- President Carl Sumner Knopf, who modeled commitment to ideals and vision, even in the midst of hardship and opposition.
- Professor Marion Morange, who modeled an investment in this institution and its students, generating significant dividends in the lives of many. Willamette has been successful and has had reason to celebrate this past year because of exemplary trustees, faculty, and staff members like these.

Because students are the reason that the University exists, Willamette's sesquicentennial rightly focused on its distinguished students—past and present. Homecoming, the Founders' Day Ball, Freshman Glee, and a series of alumni symposia brought current and former students together and served as a vivid reminder of the University's continuing and developing heritage.

While Willamette's sesquicentennial year was marked appropriately by a number of celebration activities, the University's primary attention was still devoted to its mission: providing a quality education for exceptional students. I am pleased that Willamette's vice presidents, academic deans, and chaplain have provided snapshots of their areas for this review of 1991-92, which collectively provide a full picture of the University's last academic year. May I encourage you to review carefully their words and appreciate, as I do, the accomplishments of this dedicated and able group of men and women who lead an equally dedicated and able staff and faculty who serve the students of Willamette. If there ever was a time to celebrate, it is now. Let them tell you why.

The 1991-92 year was indeed "A Time to Celebrate"—not only because of a distinguished past and strong present, but also because of a bright future. As this Annual Report attests, Willamette's sesquicentennial year was its best fund-raising year ever. Many trustees, alumni, and friends stepped forward to maintain and nurture the University's heritage of providing "for future generations."

Willamette University has been, is, and will be the product of those who—with faith and confidence in the institution—provide for its future and its coming generations of faculty and students. I want to thank each of you who have helped to make Willamette such a distinguished and successful University. And I invite each of you to participate fully in the exciting days ahead. I want the bicentennial generation to take proper pride in what our sesquicentennial generation has done to further the dreams of Jason Lee and the thousands who have followed him through these last 150 years.

The five giant sequoias known as the Star Trees were planted on campus in 1942 during the administration of President Carl Sumner Knopf to commemorate the University's centennial anniversary.

Music professor Martin Behnke, standing front right, acknowledges the Willamette University Wind Ensemble who performed Behnke's sesquicentennial commissioned work "A Celebration of Hymns" at the Founders' Day sesquicentennial concert.

College of Liberal Arts Celebrates Progress

Julie Ann Carson
Dean, College of Liberal Arts

IT IS NOT UNCOMMON to hear faculty, alumni, and trustees refer to "the new Willamette." Vocal inflection may rise or fall, depending on the topic and their memory of people, programs and events. As I conclude my fourth year at Willamette, I can only listen: the Willamette I know has been on a steady path towards national distinction since the mid-eighties.

Such travels are not without anxiety. As we consider broader vistas and use colleges such as Carleton, Oberlin, Williams, and Pomona as comparison institutions, we are wary of losing what makes us unique, yet we acknowledge that other fine colleges have standards and programs from which we can learn.

We are dedicated to our identity as a teaching institution, but we understand that faculty scholarship is necessary for dynamic classroom experiences. We recognize students' desire for the pragmatic, yet we trust that genuine liberal arts education will ultimately serve them better.

One might ask why this pursuit of national distinction and unapologetically high standards. There are both philosophical and practical answers. On the philosophical side, I endorse Mark Van Doren's observation, "The one intolerable thing in education is the absence of intellectual design." We are a strong, stable college capable of communicating with, and in some cases, leading, the best colleges in curricular coherence and reform. In our endless debates over mission and standards, we keep refining our intellectual design to insure our students' success in life.

But there is the practical side, too. As we become better known for our programs, we get invited to apply for grants to make us even stronger. A good example occurred this spring when the College was selected to convene in Asheville, N.C., with other progressive colleges to discuss general education, the core of any liberal arts degree. We were also among 100 national colleges selected to apply for a Pew Foundation grant to improve general education and pedagogy. The Murdock Charitable Trust invited our science faculty to apply for a major grant, that will prepare us for yet another proposal. (Our faculty won the $75,000 grant and worked with eight undergraduate co-researchers this summer.)

Another practical side of being recognized nationally is that as our faculty and students apply for awards or study, their high quality is presumed. We saw this as Douglas McGaughey (religious studies) won a coveted full-salary Fulbright Research Award to study in Germany and Todd Silverstein (biochemistry) was selected to be a Fulbright teaching professor in Norway. Our students benefit, too. Angela Smith, a political science/philosophy major from Seattle and former recipient of a Willamette Undergraduate Research Award, won the nationally competitive Javits Fellowship for graduate study, which she will take to Harvard University. Eric Harker, a junior from Idaho, has been selected for the two-year General Motors Scholarship—one of 10 students in the nation. In the four years of the GM program, three Willamette undergraduates have won this honor, more than any other college or university in the country.

As I look back at the past academic year, I realize that the path we have been traveling towards national prominence has required us to turn some corners and consider some new routes—but also that our faculty and students are intrepid travelers, ready for challenges and confident about the future. Compass and canteen in hand, I look forward to my fifth year as dean, and continuing with them on our journey together.

Atkinson Graduate School Stays in Touch

G. Dale Weight

Dean, Atkinson Graduate School of Management

"Both graduates we interviewed were outstanding. They presented a well-rounded perspective and solid analytical and communication skills. Most impressive, however, was the focus on teamwork and team-building. This is an outstanding focus to bring to the workplace."—WARD BECKER, PRINCIPAL, KPMG PEAT MARWICK MANAGEMENT CONSULTANTS.

IN A YEAR when the business press has raised serious questions about the value and product of graduate management education, it is important to recognize the existence of management programs—like the Atkinson School—whose mission and standards of measuring the success of their program are in touch with the needs of the current managerial environment.

At the Atkinson School we measure the viability of our program through the analytical, teamwork, and leadership skills acquired by our students...through the involvement and feedback of employers who hire our graduates...and through the number of alumni who loyally support the School by participating in our educational, network, and fund-raising activities.

In addition, we measure our achievements by our dedication and ability to provide a program at the leading edge of graduate management education. Our achievements of the 1991-92 academic year were significant and reflect the commitment of Atkinson faculty, students, administrators and staff.

In September, the largest class in the history of the School began their management education. The entering class was welcomed by the new and innovative Compass Week Program, a challenging "jump-start" to the academic year. In May, we graduated our largest class to date.

Keeping pace with the changes in the management environment, the Core Curriculum was enhanced through the introduction of courses in international political economy and management of human resources, as well as the implementation of our innovative LINE (Legal, International, Negotiation and Ethics) Management program.

Atkinson students benefited from the implementation of new and innovative career services. The inaugural Managerial Development Workshop introduced first-year students to strategic career management and issues of workforce diversity. The Compass Week program for second-year students provided interaction with corporate recruiters, and opportunities for self assessment and the development of interview skills. Atkinson staff played a leadership role in the first-ever West Coast MBA-Consortium, which attracted recruiters from 30+ employers. And in spite of organizational downsizing and the uncertain Northwest economy, our placement success was higher than other Northwest graduate programs.

Major milestones were achieved by student chapters of professional organizations, especially the Society of Human Resource Management and newly-chartered Atkinson Marketing Group.

The Atkinson School contributed to the Sesqui-centennial Celebration through its involvement in securing the issue of the Waller Hall Historic Commemorative U. S. Postal Card. In May we began the installation of the Northwest Collection—photographs, advertisements and company memorabilia that honor the commercial spirit of the Northwest.

Our Atkinson Management Society continued to expand its professional programs and service to the School; it achieved 42.5 percent participation in the 1991-92 Annual Fund, with total giving ($19,740) just shy of our $20,000 goal.

Finally, to ensure our goal of becoming the pre-eminent graduate management program in the Northwest, we developed the framework for a Five-Year Master Plan. Trustees and faculty began work with School administrators on 11 key performance areas, among them endowment development, AACSB/NASPAA accreditation, enrollment management and student placement.

We celebrate the achievements of 1991-92. But true and lasting achievements are measured only over time. We continue to challenge ourselves to reach the leading edge, and we invite you to join us in our quest.

The College of Law Celebrates and Builds

Robert L. Misner
Dean, College of Law

"I've seen the future and it's much like the present, only longer." —DAN QUISENBERRY, KANSAS CITY ROYALS, 1981.

THREE SIMULTANEOUS OCCURRENCES have caused the College of Law to do much soul-searching about its past, its present and its future during the past year. The University's Sesquicentennial Celebration has pushed to the fore the history of Willamette University in providing quality education in a student-centered environment. The process of the College of Law in preparing for the American Bar Association accreditation inspection has required that the faculty analyze where we have come in the seven years since the last accreditation visit, and evaluate our current program. Finally, the completion of the expansion and renovation of the Collins Legal Center has focused attention on new opportunities for faculty and students which only a new facility can provide.

What have we learned about ourselves from these three occurrences? We have learned that the reputation of our faculty, coupled with our new curriculum and new facility, have attracted a record number of applicants with entry credentials stronger than those of any class in more than a decade. Almost 45 percent of our students come from universities in Washington and California. Almost one of every seven students is from a minority background. Student retention rates are the highest in history.

We have learned that we have one of the most loyal alumni groups of any law school in the West—over 33 percent of our alumni gave last fiscal year to the Annual Fund. The Annual Fund also reached a new high in the amount donated to the College of Law. The loyalty of our alumni is evident in the fact that our graduates are still in high demand despite a tight job market. Our alumni remain the most frequent employers of our graduates. Participation in the activities of the College of Law by alumni has soared this past year through participation in class reunions, moot court programs, career advice and the Board of Visitors. In addition, an intense schedule of symposia attracted many alumni back to campus. Highlighted this year at the College of Law were a conference on refugees, which was funded through the Ford Foundation; a series of speakers on environmental and water law; the 11th Annual Tax Conference; and the Annual Conference for Dispute Resolution which centered debate on the issue of fee arbitration between clients and lawyers.

Finally, we have learned that our future is bright because we have remained faithful to our joint mission of teaching and scholarship. The reconstructed Collins Legal Center was designed first and foremost with the student in mind. Classroom space is now more than double what it was in the old facility. Library space has doubled and within the library we have more than twice the study spaces which we had previously. A spacious student lounge and student organization area complete the picture. Faculty areas are well designed to further faculty-student contact. All faculty offices are tied into our university computer network, so world-wide databases are within an arm's length of each professor's desk.

We have celebrated well in 1992. Let us continue to excel so that those who follow will have equal cause to celebrate in 2042.

Celebrating Community

Franklin D. Meyer
Vice President, Student Affairs

COMMUNITY IS THE CORNERSTONE of student affairs programming, and Willamette has always emphasized building strong community.

But what happens to community when the assumptions about it, and our sense of world order itself, are fundamentally challenged? College students today are confronted by such a situation:

- The debate between protection of first amendment rights and individual civil rights recently reached the bench of the U.S. Supreme Court, but seems far from resolved. The outcome will directly affect campus communities and the teaching-learning relationship itself.

- Obtaining a good job was once taken for granted by graduates of Willamette, but now is perceived as problematic. This has caused some students to question the value of a college degree.

- The Soviet Union has disintegrated. Riots have erupted in Los Angeles. Archbishop Tutu recently despaired about South Africa saying, "Our country is on the brink of disaster."

- Women, ethnic people, students with disabilities, and homosexuals assert their rights more forcefully, as they should. Questions raised within our community rapidly overwhelm once-easy answers. Rather than discovering a thousand points of light, we have run headlong into a thousand points of view.

When so much change fundamental to defining our community occurs, how does a community-oriented campus like Willamette respond?

Several years ago a freshman at an orientation meeting asked "When will the first meeting of the gay and lesbian student group be held?" From this question, GALA, our gay, lesbian and bisexual student group, was formed. Likewise a women's center, the Black Student Organization, Unidos Por Fin, the Non-traditionally Aged Student Organization and the Willamette International Student Association were created to meet expressed needs of students.

Not all services are organization-related. The number of students with disabilities attending college has increased dramatically. Whereas we once said, "you are welcome if you can cope," we now provide services and accessibility to community members with specific needs.

These new programs serve students well, but it is equally gratifying to see what students give back. Last fall, the Black Student Organization and Unidos Por Fin hosted 600 elementary ethnic and low income students to help them celebrate their cultures and introduce them to college life. Multicultural law students established a mentorship program in Portland to encourage and tutor elementary students.

In the Community Outreach Program, 328 volunteers logged 12,043 hours in the Community Outreach Program. Greek organizations have linked with this program for their philanthropic projects.

We have made a good start at adjusting to the changes related to a more complex society. But we have only begun and the nature of these changes requires us to continue to adjust and lead as the process continues. These changes need not alarm us. They are, I believe, a reason to celebrate an even stronger Willamette. Our student body is more diverse than ever, yet our fundamental mission remains the same: good teaching, close relationships, values-oriented learning, respect for ideas, respect for the individual and the presence of a viable, supportive campus community.

Students Reach Out To the Community

Top: TIVA student Fumitaka Takei and Willamette student Melinda Hoffman '92 working to clear a site. Above: Kent Koth, program director.

IN THE BASEMENT of a church which provides shelter for the homeless, a group of Willamette University students listened to a message from the pastor: "If people just do what they can on a local level they can make changes."

Taking this message to heart, many students are giving up spring and Christmas breaks, evenings and weekends because they want to help make real changes in the lives of others.

As part of the Alternative Break Program, students spend time in Portland or Salem, working in various social service agencies and living in churches. Alternative Break is one of the volunteer opportunities organized through Willamette's Community Outreach Program, a consortium of student-initiated, community-based volunteer organizations, founded in 1990 under the Office of Student Activities.

Kent Koth is coordinator of the new program, which is funded through a partnership between the University and an ACTION Student Community Service grant which began at $20,000 and will continue for three years, decreasing by $5,000 each year. Koth said that during the 1991-92 school year 328 volunteer Willamette students worked more than 12,043 hours in service.

In the Community Outreach office, a data bank of volunteers is maintained and a library contains books and other information on volunteer service. Educational presentations addressing issues of urban poverty are organized through the program and a list of Salem-area volunteer opportunities is available. Students are also assisted in locating post-graduate and summer volunteer opportunities.

Students speak in terms of what they have received by giving their time to others. None feel they have made a sacrifice, but rather that they have received something very special.

Lorin Abarr '92 is from Circle, Mont., and majored in economics at Willamette. Instead of returning home to celebrate Christmas this year, Abarr went to Portland with 15 other students to do volunteer work.

"I was starting to wonder what I wanted to do when I got out of college and starting to feel a void in my life," he said. "I saw something about the Alternative Break Program I felt I needed." For one year he has spent his breaks working in homeless shelters and the Portland HIV Center; tutoring students from inner city schools who are having behavior problems in conventional classroom settings; and tutoring children at the St. Francis Devereaux Library Tutoring Project in Salem. Approximately 15 other students from Willamette go to the Devereaux Apartments each week to work with the students, most of whom are in migrant families, helping them with homework, reading and playing with them.

"The homeless shelter was more intense emotionally," Abarr said. "It was easier to become saddened by what I saw. At the same time it was oddly uplifting. I didn't expect to connect with the people I met in a shelter. That's what I liked best about the experience. It turns statistics into people and breaks down stereotypes I had about homeless people being drunks or lazy. I found out that wasn't true."

Breaking down stereotypes is central to the students' volunteer work. They learn the homeless are not all ragged, dirty, and lazy; nor do the homeless talk endless gibberish to themselves. The students learn that kids in juvenile detention are not necessarily big, burly, tough guys; some are small, lost children who have suffered lifetimes of abuse. Stereotypes about people with AIDS and the developmentally disabled are similarly exploded.

Kevin Otos '92 received his degree in theatre and psychology. He spent evenings during his senior year working with students at Hillcrest School in Salem. Otos held drama classes for the students based on improvisational comedy, theatre games and some group-building exercises to increase the students' trust and self-esteem.

"When I first went to Hillcrest I was not excited about working in juvenile corrections," Otos said, "but what I found were some very nice kids. Sure, some were considered dangerous, and they were definitely troubled, but I also saw kids who want to be loved. My ideas changed." Some of what Otos saw struck very close to home. "I have a sister who is 12 years old," he said. "At Hillcrest I met a girl the same age who had sold sex for drugs. It was a reality I had never considered."

One of the newest programs in Community Outreach is Best Buddies, a national organization begun by Anthony Kennedy Shriver in 1987 at Georgetown University. This college-based volunteer program promotes friendships between university students and persons with mental retardation.

Cindy Hawkins '93 became acquainted with the program at Pepperdine University. She would take her Best Buddy for hot fudge sundaes and walks on the beach. She wanted to encourage similar friendships here at Willamette.

Through her efforts, Willamette now has the first Best Buddies program in the Pacific Northwest. Hawkins attended a national leadership conference for Best Buddies this summer in Baltimore and is busy making plans with Sunny Oaks Inc. in Salem to pair up 15-20 students with a like number of people with mental retardation.

Kym Cox '94 majors in psychology and has done volunteer work at Hillcrest, Reach Community Development, Salem Outreach Shelter and Operation Nightwatch, a drop-in hospitality center for the homeless in Portland.

"I started going to Hillcrest just to read to the students," she said. "My first night there I just fell for the kids and wanted to do more." She stayed on to help plan a lip-synch show. "I care about them a lot and want to do more to help them," said Cox, who certainly did not get involved helping others out of boredom. She has been active in Circle K, Model U.N., the University budget committee, the year-book staff, the Parents' Weekend staff and student senate.

Chiharu Sai '94 used her talents as a pianist to entertain patients in nursing homes, veterans' hospitals and the HIV Center. "I wanted to try new things," she said, "do something different and see a different view of the U.S. College is a very sheltered life."

She felt that volunteering gave her an opportunity to see reality. "It was so overwhelming, I was shocked by the feeling of hopelessness. Many of the children I worked with had never learned how to hug."

Not only are lives being changed among the recipients of these students' time and talents, but the students' lives are being changed and enriched as well.

During the spring of 1992 Abarr went to San Francisco to work in two homeless shelters. He plans to continue in this type of work, and wants to go to Costa Rica through Harvard's World Development Institute or work in the U.S. with VISTA. "I especially enjoy tutoring the children," he has said.

Cox said she used to want a career counseling adults, but working with young people has changed her. "Working with children is something I would look into now."

Whether it's tutoring young migrant children in literacy, writing a letter for someone dying of AIDS, refurbishing low-income housing, serving meals to the homeless, being a friend to people with disabilities, staffing crisis hotlines, or entertaining the elderly, these students are the best examples Willamette has to offer of its motto: "Not Unto Ourselves Alone Are We Born."

In Celebration Of Teaching

Donald R.
Breakey '50
Professor of Biology

RETIRING AFTER 38 YEARS of teaching at Willamette University stimulates reflection of those things most memorable, good and bad; the tasks accomplished and left undone; the many people whose lives I have touched and those who have touched mine. I have accumulated rich memories of incomparable measure and worth.

It is only coincidental that my retirement should occur at the same time as the Sesquicentennial Celebration of the University. That event is one more significant highlight to add to the thousands of experiences gained. And it is all the more reason for me to celebrate the 150 years of a University which has been so much a part of my life for so long.

It is also appropriate to ask pointed questions of myself regarding this span. Was my life wasted? Definitely not! Were there great accomplishments? Hopefully great, definitely accomplishments. And, as always, I suppose, there could have been much more. Would I do the same thing again? Definitely, although there could have been some improvement of a few events along the way, but that is hindsight developed from experience.

It is a bit sad to step aside from an activity which provided an emotional high from observing the accomplishments of others. Watching graduating seniors receive diplomas; comparing the enthusiastic, delightful, mature people to those with the same names who were first encountered four years before has been a source of elation. Encountering a particularly well written, lucid and accomplished examination answer always brought a smile. And, the development of enthusiasm in others for the many concepts and objets d'biologie is very much a part of the reward.

Shortly after receiving the request to write this, I acquired The Flamingo's Smile by Stephen Jay Gould. A statement in the prologue, "every month is a new adventure in learning and expression" (in reference to his preparation for the monthly feature in Natural History Magazine), was profound and personally applicable to my own experience. I immediately grasped the idea of the statement to be in tune with the train of thought I had begun when asked to write reflections for this report.

In only a slightly different context, my paraphrase of the statement would read, "every day is a new adventure in learning and expression." How true. A precise statement of the type of activity I have carried out most of my life. And, don't all educated people do the same?

As a teacher, I continually took great delight in discovering new ideas and synthesizing that information into the bank of information gathered before. And my enthusiasm, in the discovery and learning of something not before considered, always resulted in the wonderful experience of retelling. Part of the fun was the integrating, modifying, synthesizing and recounting.

Not only do I feel a personal satisfaction from this process, but the added payment was to observe the "learning and expression" carried out by students. The feedback in exams, oral reports and simple conversations was rewarding when, after reading or hearing something all the way through, I could say he or she understood. Unfortunately, there are times when he or she didn't, but that revelation called for a retake.

And so, I move on to a new life style: one which is reputed to have less stress generated by trying to meet deadlines. But by using the same modus operandi, "learning and expression" lives on. It is the mode for life itself, for me.

Richard L. Biffle
Professor of Education

THE CELEBRATION OF TEACHING begins with a celebration of self. For all that is said and done in and out of the world of teaching, I can think of no other profession that provides such a wealth of experiences in guiding students through the sights, sounds, emotions and feelings of learning. The celebration of teaching starts with a celebration of our work — we are teachers because we choose to be teachers ... to inspire in the minds and spirits of others a passion for knowledge and understanding.

As we move toward the 21st century, our world has become an increasingly complex mosaic of ideas, people, thoughts and words. Teachers have the ability to open up the universe to what is and what can be. Teachers in higher education have the unique opportunity to give all that they know and understand, with expectation that their students will go far beyond this knowledge. Willamette offers something that is rare in higher education today — the fact that excellence in teaching is at the foundation of the educational experience.

Having just completed my first year as a member of the Willamette community, I can attest to the strong commitment to excellence in teaching which is the essence of learning, discussion and interaction supporting teachers and students.

The department of education Master of Arts in Teaching program (MAT) is an important link in the pioneering efforts of restructuring teacher education which are occurring at colleges across the country. The MAT program is highly respected and regionally recognized in the forefront of changes and thinking in educational technology, curriculum and instruction, evaluation and assessment, and multicultural education. We offer elementary and secondary certification, and are an integral part of the planning process in developing a new middle school certification procedure. Lifelong learning is at the cornerstone of this approach with a belief that we are teachers first and leaders always.

Our goal is to produce graduates who will become more than classroom teachers. The first goal is to develop students into broadly knowledgeable educators, as opposed to specialists. Students are involved in experiences that provide an understanding of how children develop, how learning takes place, how to structure the environment to provide effective classroom management, and how growth and progress take place in the educational system. Second, but also important, are the specific skills of the subject matter or grade level specialist. And finally, our program enables students to become educational leaders — individuals who will make a difference in both lives of the individual students and the educational system as a whole.

Our academic year was highlighted by these activities: developing new guidelines and procedures in middle school education and certification, multicultural education staff development for the Salem-Keizer School District and Chemeketa Community College, and providing support and training to educators in educational technology. This year provided challenges for our program in designing a strategic plan to address the changes in the Oregon educational system, related to new state legislation (HB3565) in public education and future changes in the teacher certification requirements. Our students were involved in these discussions as a part of their Leadership Research Module requirements. They observed and interviewed leaders in education who are working on current and future educational policies and procedures.

We will expand upon these research projects next year. For the first time, our program will sponsor a Northwest Educational Research Symposium. In addition we will explore development of a Willamette University School of Education. This new organizational structure would allow us to maintain our existing relationship with the College of Liberal Arts while developing cooperative and collaborative efforts with the College of Law and the Atkinson Graduate School of Management.

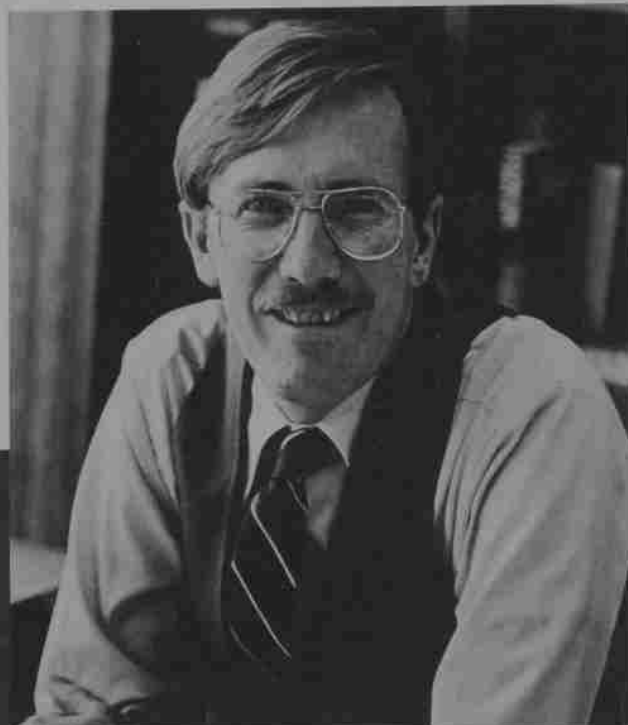

William J. Brennan stated that "the classroom is peculiarly the marketplace of ideas. The nation's future depends upon leaders trained through wide exposure to that robust exchange of ideas which discovers truth out of a multitude of tongues." I feel that for all the joy and pain, challenges and frustrations, change and growth, nothing creates such a sense of purpose and pride as working with future educational leaders—a reward and celebration of self and our students.

In the Tradition Of the Founders

Charles I. Wallace, Jr.
Chaplain

Charles I. Wallace, Jr.

EVERY DAY as I pass the dour-faced Jason Lee and a couple of his oaken-hearted friends staring down at me from the historical display next to my third-floor Waller Hall office, I want to say, "Jason, old man, lighten up!"

I don't doubt that our founders laughed occasionally and maybe, in their old-time Methodist way, even played a little. And, of course, Victorian picture-posing technology (and etiquette) didn't leave much room for smiles.

Nevertheless, it makes me wonder just what would make these old boys happy about their university today. Is there some continuity between their mission and ours that might give them a smile of satisfaction?

In general, they'd be proud of Willamette's attainments as a place of higher learning. Methodism, arguably was born at Oxford, and its work has always stressed education, founding more colleges and universities than any other denomination. Even without the trappings of 19th-century piety, a place where teaching and learning about the mysteries of creation, society, culture and humanity thrive, a place that nurtures people for fulfilling and useful lives in society, can't be all bad!

More particularly, though, they'd appreciate some of last year's religious activities, even if they aren't exact replicas of the ones they sponsored on campus 150 years ago.

• Cone Chapel's beauty, particularly at the packed Christmas Lessons and Carols service—but also at weddings, memorial services, and quieter moments when a handful meet for midweek communion or students come in ones and twos for prayer and meditation.

• Two special worship services in celebration of the sesquicentennial (on Homecoming Weekend in September and Founders' Day Sunday in February).

• The Palmer Lecture—a two day symposium for clergy in the Oregon-Idaho and the Pacific Northwest Annual Conferences—for the first time on our campus. Lecturers were Japanese theologian Kosuke Koyama and German theologian Manfred Marquardt.

• The noon-time forum our office orchestrated in Jackson Plaza after the Rodney King verdict: people gathered to express anger and frustration, but understanding, hope and a sense of community were strengthened.

• The Community Outreach Program's new visibility—and the hundreds of volunteer hours that students put into the wider community: a living out of the Willamette motto, "Not unto ourselves alone are we born."

• Opportunities for study and fellowship, not only through our office but also in adjunct campus ministries. Of particular interest: the Spirituality and the Arts workshops, presented by Ardis Letey, a Eugene artist, in connection with the United Methodist campus ministries at Oregon State and the University of Oregon.

• An extremely successful School of Theological Studies, the 17th annual edition of our community adult education program, this year featuring religion professors Lane McGaughy and David McCreery with a popular class on the Dead Sea Scrolls.

• Our first-ever seminary intern, Lynn Jurczak, a student from Pacific School of Religion, shared her gifts and graces, working half-time with our office and half-time with Salem First United Methodist Church.

• A visit from Christian ethicist Daren Lebacqz (not coincidentally, one of Lynn Jurczak's professors at Pacific School of Religion) speaking on sexual ethics and ethics in the professions.

The list could go on, but calling just these occasions to mind, I can almost see Brother Lee's visage changing as I pass by his picture. If he's not grinning ear to ear, at least his eyes are sparkling.

Rejoicing in Promise

Todd Hutton
Vice President, Academic Affairs

AS I REFLECT on the past year of celebration, I am reminded that we rejoiced not only in Willamette's 15 decades of remarkable achievements but also in its uncommon promise for the future. This promise resides in those faculty, students, administrators and staff who refuse to settle for the routine and who, in David Ogilvy's words, "aim for the remarkable." The Sesquicentennial Celebration reminded us that Willamette is a university community which is aiming for the remarkable, which is engaged in an ongoing quest for excellence. Administrators and staff in the Academic Administration division were very much a part of this quest.

The year was one of dramatic change within the division. Departments continued to strengthen their philosophy of service. New programs and consortia were developed. Activities were evaluated, and roles and organizational relationships were re-defined.

The most visible of the changes in the division was the initiation of a new program area — Academic Computing/User Services. Like many other universities, the use of information technology at Willamette is becoming ubiquitous. A range of services is now needed to support computing uses in classrooms, laboratories and offices. The University established Academic Computing to assist faculty with the integration of software applications into curriculum; provide training for faculty, staff and students in computer uses; and manage network and academic computing resources. This was accompanied by the organization of Willamette Integrated Technology Services (WITS) which included related service areas of Academic Computing, Administrative Computing and the Learning Resources Center.

Other events in the division also offered cause for celebration. These included selection of a new management information system (MIS) for the University, installation of a new automation system for the Mark O. Hatfield Library, and receipt of a $1 million grant from the Meyer Memorial Trust for instructional technology and library books and materials. The first of the three brings to fruition 15 months of intensive work by many campus offices who identified needs and evaluated available software and hardware. The new MIS will replace a 12-year-old system and should dramatically improve the University's ability to manage and use information for planning and decision making. The new library system offers enhanced capabilities for conducting research, accessing the collection, and cataloging more than 10,000 volumes and 1,355 periodicals each year. The Meyer grant will provide a state-of-the-art computer classroom, a computerized writing center, facilities for computer-assisted foreign language instruction, network connections for the College of Law and advanced media and computer capabilities in two Atkinson classrooms.

Other notable highlights included recruitment of a university registrar who will assume leadership of the office during "Buzz" Yocom's last year at Willamette. Buzz will continue to serve as executive assistant to the president until his retirement in May 1993. Finally, the University witnessed the continued expansion of the services provided by the Academic Grants and Awards Office. The director of the office, Dr. Patricia Alley, assisted students and faculty with applications for fellowships and grants. In its second year of operation, this office continued to address the University's goal of encouraging faculty to pursue scholarship which will enhance their teaching and contribute to their fields.

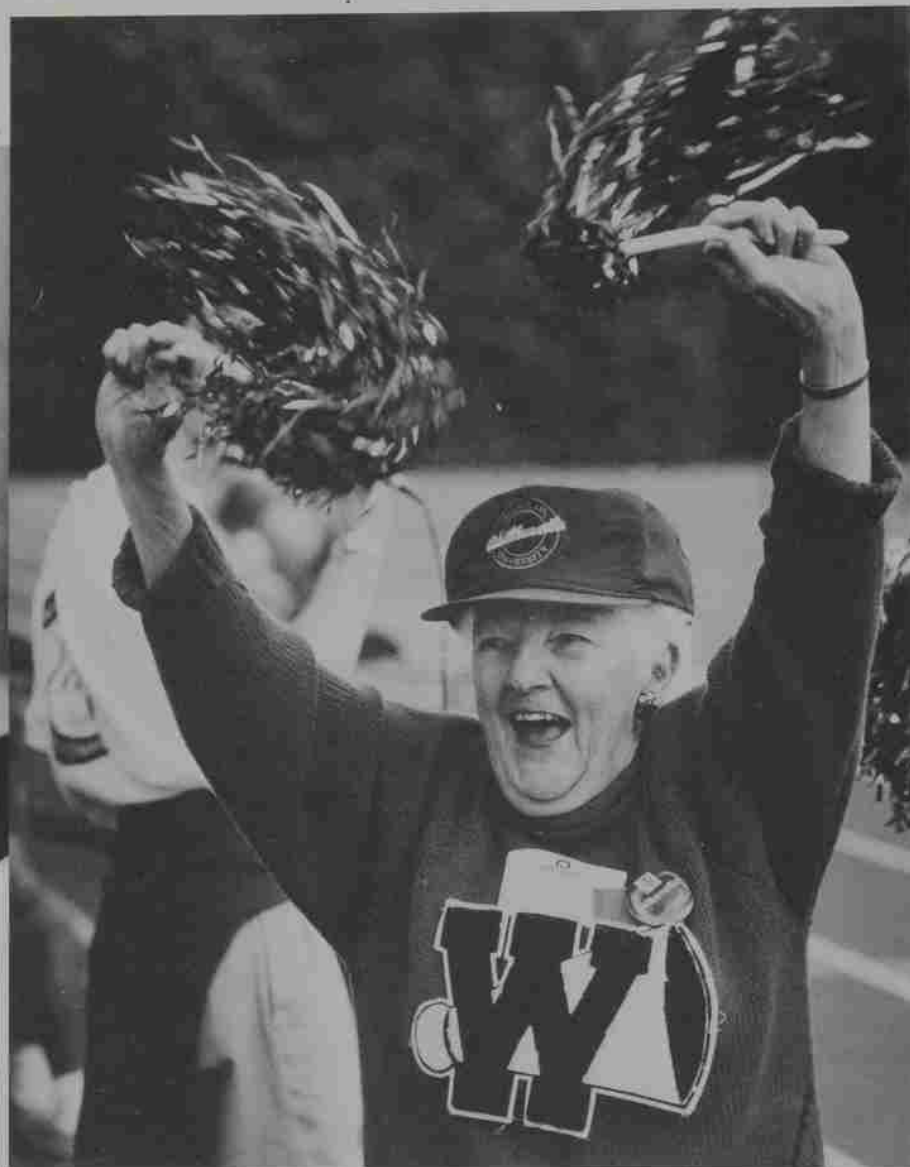

The Academic Administration division has an ambitious agenda for 1992-93 and joins the other administrative divisions and three schools in keeping alive our celebration of excellence and "in aiming for the remarkable."

Strengthening Facilities With Financial Stability

Brian Hardin
Vice President, Financial Affairs

ENDOWMENT MARKET VALUE

In $ Millions

WILLAMETTE'S 150TH YEAR brought new tangible manifestations of the University's financial and facilities strength with the sale of a $9.75 million bond issue and the completion of the major part of the Collins Legal Center expansion and renovation and of the new Goudy Commons. The bond issue, which received an A rating from Moody's Investors Service, was sold on June 13, 1991, with an average yield of 6.83 percent. The proceeds of this, the University's first public borrowing, are being used as partial long-term funding for construction of the Goudy Commons, for temporary financing of a planned renovation of the Putnam Center and remodel of the kitchens and dining rooms vacated when the commons opened.

In authorizing a major borrowing at favorable terms Willamette's trustees took advantage of the University's long-term financial stability. That strength was further enhanced by the financial results of 1991-92 operations. Willamette's budget continued the string of operation surpluses going back into the '70s. This year's surplus, representing nearly 1.5 percent of the $35 million unrestricted operating budget, will be set aside for facilities improvements including a planned computer system upgrade.

Combined with the favorable operating results mentioned above and the excellent fund-raising success described elsewhere in this report, the University enjoyed outstanding investment performance during 1991-92. The General Endowment Fund earned a total return of 16 percent which was in the tenth percentile of balanced funds (where the first percentile is the best performing and the 50th is average). Willamette's endowed funds at the end of the fiscal year totaled $90,029,000, compared with $82,458,000 last year.

Financial highlights from the attached balance sheet include:

- Growth of $22,670,000 in total assets at cost, from $115,400,000 to $138,070,000 (those totals would be much larger at market value)
- Growth in liabilities of $12,032,000, from $4,140,000 to $16,172,000 due to the bond issue described above;
- Growth in total fund balance (equity or net assets) of $10,638,000 from $111,260,000 to $121,898,000.

That growth in total fund balance, which is equivalent to the institution's total wealth at cost, came from three main sources. The largest was capital fund-raising. The second largest was the amount by which investment income including realized gains exceeded endowment spending and the third largest was the operating surplus described above.

EXPENDITURES BY FUNCTION

In addition to the Finance Office, the Financial Affairs Division of the University includes the Physical Plant Department, the Personnel Office, the Bookstore, the Purchasing Office, the Copy Center, the Word Processing Center and the Mail Center. The year 1991-92 was a busy one in all of those areas.

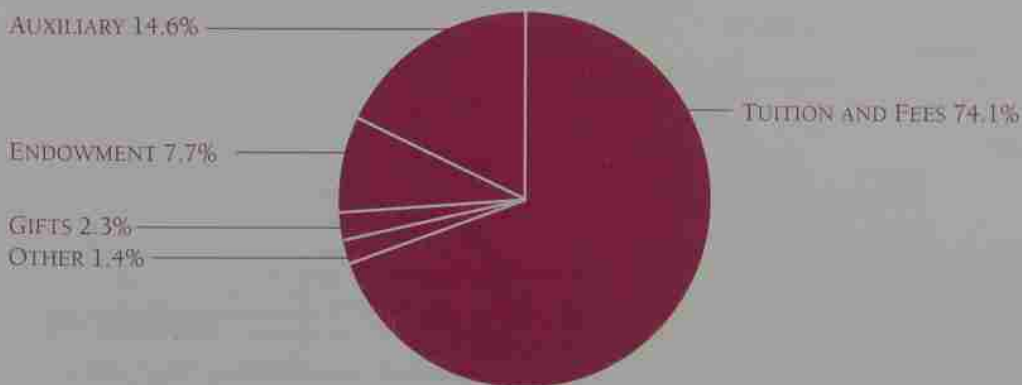

Besides overseeing the two major construction projects, the physical plant managed numerous smaller remodel and renovation jobs on the campus including designing and constructing several grounds and building improvements. The University hired a new director of personnel services, Don Miller, who has already implemented improvements in our human resources program. The copy center acquired new computer-controlled equipment which has improved productivity and quality at a lower cost per copy. And the bookstore acquired bar-code reading cash registers and a related accounting system which improves both service and accuracy.

Our mission in Financial Affairs is to support the academic and student service programs of the University by enhancing and preserving both financial assets and the physical environment and by providing effective and efficient auxiliary services to the Willamette community. I believe that Willamette's 150th year brought significant progress toward fulfillment of that mission.

Applauding Dedication, Confidence, Commitment

Barbara S. Mahoney
Vice President, University Relations

AT AN EARLY PLANNING MEETING for the sesquicentennial celebration, Professor Maurice Stewart suggested planting a Gliding Dragon Tree like the one he had seen on the grounds of the temple Yoshimine Dera in the suburbs of Kyoto. For 600 years, this pine has been trained to grow horizontally to 300 feet.

As the idea unfolded, it became in my mind an appropriate symbol of the confidence and commitment characteristic of those involved with Willamette. For the dedication of Willamette's Gliding Dragon Tree, Professor Stewart wrote:

Clearly only a special institution can dedicate six centuries to shaping a tree. Such an institution must last for centuries, look forward to its future and respect its past. Willamette University is such an institution.

The theme of this annual report is "A Time to Celebrate" and, indeed, in a year in which higher education was everywhere under siege, Willamette found a great deal to celebrate in its distinguished past, its exceptional present, and its promising future.

And what a celebration it was! Each of us has a favorite memory: the gala in the Capitol rotunda, the reunion concert, the Homecoming bonfire, the alumni symposia, Founders' Day. The celebration left its mark on the campus in Mark Sponenburgh's sculpture "Town and Gown," the Rose Garden, the Commencement mosaic, the Gliding Dragon Tree. For me, the most important aspect of the year was that it provided an opportunity for so many to come to campus, to experience again what Willamette is and what it can become. It was a pleasure to have you here. If you didn't make it, it is never too late. You are always welcome.

In the preceding pages, my colleagues have shared with you the achievements of our students and faculty. They have told you of programs and facilities which support the teaching mission of the University. They have conveyed what I believe to be a justifiable pride in Willamette's success and stability.

The sense of accomplishment that this year brings is yours in a special way, because so many of you committed yourselves, your time and your resources to our common enterprise, Willamette University. You identified prospective students for the admissions offices; you served as trustees, alumni board members, campaign and celebration volunteers, symposium panelists, and career mentors; you set new records for participation in the annual fund and in the parents' fund; you enabled the University to enjoy its best fundraising year ever.

Several years ago, when Willamette took an assessment of itself and laid out its goals in a long-range planning process, we were very conscious of the dangers of complacency, of the need always to strive to be better. The Sesquicentennial Campaign was launched to secure the University's future.

In the following pages, I am pleased to report on the progress of the Sesquicentennial Campaign as it passes its halfway point. Your response has been heartening. Through your gifts to the annual funds, you have provided for the present; through your gifts to capital and endowment, you have invested in the future. We are very grateful.

The Sesquicentennial Year is past, but the achievements, the aspirations and the challenges it highlighted continue. I look forward to sharing them with you.

JASON LEE SOCIETY

The Jason Lee Society is the highest of Willamette's annual donor recognition groups. Named for the principal founder of Willamette University, this organization honors individuals who contributed $1,000 or more to the University during the last fiscal year. Lee himself made the ultimate sacrifice, dying while traveling in search of financial support. His entire estate was left to Willamette and his gift continues to affect the lives of young people attending his beloved school 150 years later.

WALLER SOCIETY

The Waller Society is named for Alvin F. Waller, who carried on the tradition of service and devotion begun by Jason Lee. This society honors individuals who contributed $500 to $999 to Willamette. It was Alvin Waller, as the University's agent, who bore the responsibility for developing the financial well-being of Willamette as the University grew. It was he who found the funds and supervised the construction of what is now known as Waller Hall, completed in 1867.

STEP SOCIETY

The Step Society commemorates the historic old step at Waller Hall, worn by the feet of so many people over time. The society honors individuals who contributed $250 to $499 to Willamette during the last fiscal year. Contributors to the Step Society provide vital support for the academic footing needed by new generations of students who cross Willamette's threshold.

Students from Bulgaria

Elissaveta Ivanova and Todor Petev, students from Sofia, Bulgaria, who started at Willamette during the 1991-92 school year, show that students also give to the University. The competition that brought them to the United States had more than 450 entrants, and from that number 80 were selected to apply to colleges in this country. The competition required first writing an essay, then going through an interview process with people from the American embassy, and representatives of the universities and foundations supporting the program.

Eli, an English major who wants to study journalism, has worked for the University phonathon, generating more pledges this year than any other caller. This past summer she traveled to Atlanta, Georgia, to intern with CNN; and then went to Bulgaria with an Undergraduate Research Grant to study Bulgarian coverage of the American elections in 1988 and 1992. No study has yet been done on the Bulgarian press, although there are studies on many other Eastern European countries. During the fall of 1992 she is attending American University in Washington, D.C., to study journalism, after which she plans to return to Willamette.

Todor majors in art history and philosophy and has also worked on phonathons.

Three families associated with Graceland College in Iowa assisted him in coming to the United States. He had been eager to study the capitalist West, and since his English was better than his German, he came to the United States. "There is a great tolerance for different points of view here," he said. "This is essential to democracy." Todor returned to Bulgaria for a few weeks last summer to work on his undergraduate research project, Symbolism in Christian Art.

R.A. BOOTH SOCIETY

The R. A. Booth Society was established in 1990 to recognize all known planned gift donors. In the spirit of the society's namesake, these individual members provide for future generations at Willamette University.

R. A. Booth Society members have affirmed that "not unto ourselves alone are we born" by establishing planned gifts which benefit the University. These gifts include bequests, gifts of life insurance policies, life income trusts and life estates. Others have made similar provisions for the University but have preferred that their names not be listed here.

If you have named Willamette University in your will or as a beneficiary in a life insurance policy, but are not listed please let us know. We would like to express our thanks.

A Life Income Gift

The sesquicentennial Homecoming activities reminded Doris Hamilton '32 of how much her Willamette experience meant to her, and she decided to include the University in her estate plan. She later learned that a life income gift could fulfill her estate wishes and provide her with benefits in the meantime.

Therefore, she transferred some municipal bonds to a charitable remainder trust. Mrs. Hamilton now receives the same tax-free income as before, plus a significant income tax deduction this year. At her death the funds will endow the Evans and Doris Hamilton Scholarship Fund and assist generations of worthy Willamette students.

Although Mrs. Hamilton chose to use municipal bonds, real estate and appreciated stock also make good life income gifts. These gift arrangements allow the donor to avoid taxes on any asset appreciation, according to Willamette's Office of Planned Giving, which serves as a resource for people who may be interested in life income gifts.

Endowing a Chair

Endowment of the Helen Simpson Jackson Chair in International Management at the Atkinson School grew substantially last year through an additional gift of $250,000 from the chair's original benefactors, the Ford family.

The gift reflects the family's strong belief in the vital role of international trade in the quality of Oregon's economy and way of life, says Cynthia Jackson Ford, daughter of the late civic and business leader, Glenn Jackson, and his wife, the late Helen Simpson Jackson.

"It's so important to look to other shores, not just to support our economy but for cultural reasons, too," she says. "Relatively few in Oregon realize this yet."

Her son, Glenn J. Ford M'86, pointed out the need for education in that area when the family was considering the initial endowment some eight years ago. "It was really his idea [to establish the chair in international management] because he felt that was such an important direction for the school and the state," Glenn Ford, now director of international trade in the Oregon Economic Development Department, also has worked with the Atkinson School in helping select occupants for the chair, which now is held by J. Frederick Truitt.

For more than 50 years, Robert P. Blanding '42 held Willamette close to his heart. As a student and young alumnus, he took great interest in Freshman Glee—a "passionate" interest, really, according to his wife, Wanda. "In March 1948, before we were married, Bob introduced me to Freshman Glee and shared some memories he had about Willamette," Wanda Blanding has recalled to friends at the University.

During Blanding's long career in the food processing business in Eugene and Salem, he served the community as well as his alma mater. His civic interests included Camp Fire, Marion-Polk Food Share, and the business advisory committee at Chemeketa Community College in Salem. He also was a leading member of the Salem First United Methodist Church.

Blanding was active on Willamette's behalf in many ways: as a financial supporter and class agent, in alumni programs, and as a member of the board of trustees for 28 years. He was much involved in planning for the sesquicentennial celebrations at Willamette, especially for the Rose Garden, the War Years and Class of '42 reunions, and the Founders' Day Ball at the Capitol in February.

He was unable to attend the ball himself, however, because of illness, and he died a few weeks later, on March 8, 1992.

In May, during Alumni Weekend, the University awarded Bob Blanding the Lester J. Sparks Medallion in recognition of his loyalty and service to Willamette.

Olympic Scholars

*I*f you're going to care about the future, you have to care about young people," says Richard W. Buck '66. "I've never figured out a better way to invest in the future than to invest in education, especially the liberal arts."

Buck, a business reporter and columnist for the Seattle Times, is a bullish investor in Willamette. He is president of the Puget Sound Alumni Club, a leader in the Seattle edition of the Willamette Forum speaker series, and an alumni admission counselor for the College of Liberal Arts.

His recruiting extends beyond admissions. As lead solicitor for his class's 25th reunion gift, for example, he was key in raising more than $17,000 by the end of the reunion weekend.

That weekend also crystallized an idea he had mulled for some time: creating a prestigious scholarship to Willamette for students from Clallam and Jefferson counties in Washington's Olympic Peninsula, where Buck grew up. Discussions with alumni there, including Joyce Yorozu Larson '70 of Port Angeles, generated great enthusiasm. Fundraising among friends and alumni—with an especially generous gift from a member of the Class of '66—gave the idea the wings it needed to fly.

This fall, two Olympic Scholars are studying at Willamette. The scholarship is awarded on merit—graduation in the top 10 percent of the class is one criterion—and ultimately will be renewable for three years, Buck hopes.

The program not only helps deserving students and raises Willamette's profile in the Olympic Peninsula; it also continues a tradition Buck has prized. "I had the opportunity to go to Willamette only because a heckuva lot of people before me worked to make sure that opportunity would be there. Now it's our turn to do the same."

Alan Shiffer M'76

Alan M. Shiffer M'76 is a man who appreciates the advantages of a good blend.

It was the blend of public- and private-sector management curricula that drew him into the first class at the Geo. H. Atkinson Graduate School of Management. Shiffer intended a career in business but, fresh from an internship in Senator Hatfield's Washington office at the height of Watergate, he was reluctant to drop his interest in the public sector altogether. "My desire was to get the skill sets that would give me a lot of options in starting a career and a lot of flexibility later on," Shiffer says. "I've been exceedingly pleased with the education I got."

He and his wife, Diane Osborne Shiffer '77, have been steady financial supporters of the University for years. Alan Shiffer also has been active in the Atkinson alumni association and currently represents the school on the University board of trustees.

His professional experience in management consulting—he is a principal in Performance Consulting Group, based in Lake Oswego, Ore.—is a resource Willamette tapped during its recent development of a new administrative computing system.

Shiffer finds the blend of technology and liberal arts "downright exciting [when] you see some of the people using technology where it hadn't been remotely thought of before—[as] in biology or English."

From his vantage point as a trustee, Shiffer sees another profound blending taking place in the University. "I've been most impressed with what's being sought, and accomplished, in the University in terms of how the different faculties, student bodies, and schools are coming together under one umbrella and actually making the whole stronger."

Dan McMonagle L'80

Some college debts can't be repaid with money alone, believes Daniel S. McMonagle, Jr. L'80. Debts to conventional lenders, yes, but to the schools themselves one owes more.

"It's important to support your schools not only financially but to get good recruits and to talk nicely about the schools whenever you can," he says.

McMonagle does all that, readily giving credit to the College of Law for providing "the foundation [that] enabled me to be a very successful business person today."

His Seattle practice emphasizes construction law, which draws on his education at West Point and in graduate school in civil engineering at the University of Washington as well as his legal training. He especially values his Willamette work in trial advocacy with Leroy Tornquist and James A.R. Nafziger's classes in international business transactions and conflict of laws. "That group of classes [with Nafziger] was the most beneficial to my work today," McMonagle says. "It taught a very sophisticated technique for looking at complicated legal problems of the kind I deal with quite a lot."

When McMonagle headed east after graduation, he was pleasantly surprised to find Willamette's reputation had preceded him. "I had no trouble getting a job in Boston where, as you can imagine, competition is stiff. But people there had heard of Willamette. They knew it was a good school."

Henry Bailey

Memories of law libraries past and a vision of the one to come were the principal forces directing Henry J. Bailey III's generous gift last year to the College of Law building fund.

Bailey, professor emeritus of law, began his Willamette career in 1965 when the College of Law occupied what now is Gatke Hall. The law library at that time was very small and "scattered around" the building, Bailey recalls. "There wasn't even enough room for all the state statutes and reports, though that in itself didn't present a problem because we were across the street from the Supreme Court and used their library most of the time."

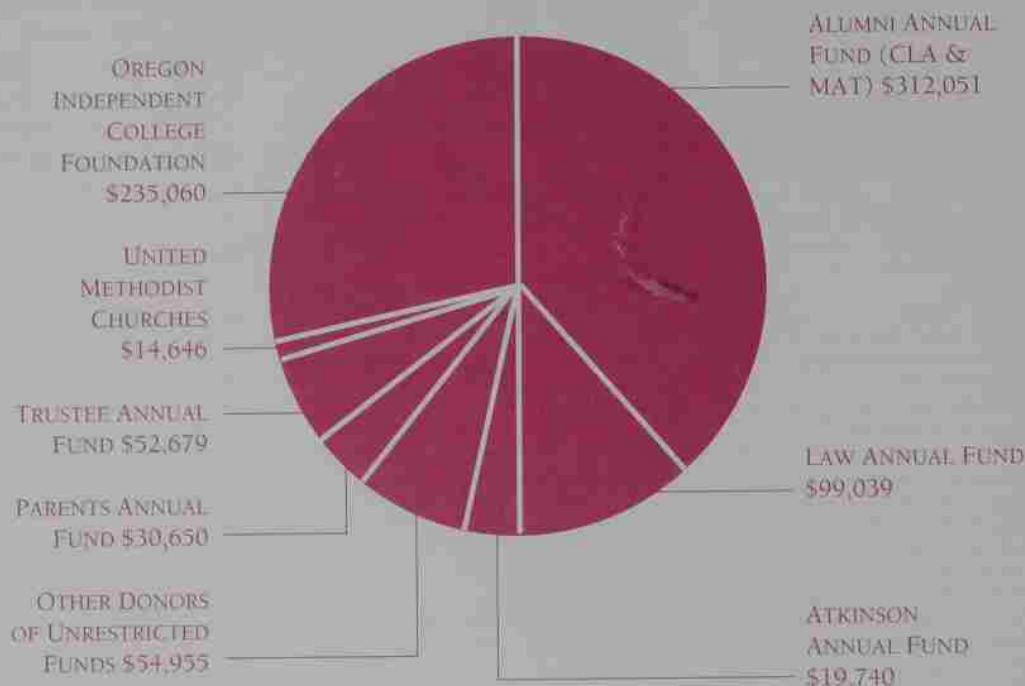

The new Collins Legal Center, with a greatly expanded and improved library, opened in 1967. "We were glad to see it," Bailey says. Later, in the mid-seventies, Bailey ran the library for half a year, in addition to his other responsibilities, while the school searched for a permanent, full-time law librarian. The search ended with the hiring of Richard F. Breen, Jr., the current librarian, "who's been just a gem," Bailey says.

Bailey's teaching and writing work took him often to the library in Collins Legal Center. His major writing project was the widely used "Brady on Bank Checks," still a legal best-seller and still under Bailey's direction though for years now he has collaborated on it with one of his former students, Willamette law professor Richard B. Hagedorn L'73.

Bailey retired from Willamette in 1981. He continues to be active in legal research and writing, and that keeps him coming back to the stacks in the law library. "I think over the years I've used that library more than any other faculty member," Bailey says. "As a customer, I want it to be as good a resource as possible."

Challenge Grants

Three challenge grants were offered to Willamette during 1991-92. The University was awarded a matching grant of $1 million from the Meyer Memorial Trust. The original request included funds for books and materials for the Hatfield Library and for instructional technology projects in each of the University's undergraduate and graduate programs. A portion of the grant has been restricted to provide money for two information technology services positions; Willamette may choose which of the proposed projects it wishes to fund with the rest of the grant.

Willamette received a $300,000 challenge grant from the Kresge Foundation under its Science Initiative Program. Six pieces of science equipment will be purchased, provided that Willamette raises $1.2 million by March 1993 for an endowment to maintain and replace this equipment. The new equipment will include: Fourier Transform-Nuclear Magnetic Resonance Spectrophotometer, Gas Chromatograph/Mass Spectrometer, Scanning Electron Microscope, Spectrometer System, Ultracentrifuge and X-Ray Apparatus.

Each year, the Collins Foundation recognizes alumni giving through the Collins Challenge program. Oregon independent colleges and universities qualify for Collins Challenge grants by teaching improved levels of participation in three annual fund areas: new donors, increased giving from previous donors and increased alumni participation overall. Willamette's 1991-92 alumni giving performance earned a $24,200 gift from the Collins Foundation, which includes a $5,000 bonus for surpassing 30 percent overall alumni participation.

Willamette Forum

Willamette has a new voice in the Portland and Seattle business communities, a voice heard through the Willamette Forum.

The Forum brings Willamette alumni and their guests together quarterly for a breakfast program featuring speakers prominent in business and civic life. Speakers at the Portland meetings have included journalist David Halberstam, Senator Bob Packwood, and Robert Parry, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco. Seattle alumni have heard Richard Cooley, chairman of Seafirst, among others.

The Forum is primarily a continuing education service for alumni, says David E. Good '67 who initiated the idea two years ago and leads a committee of Portland alumni in developing Forum programs.

Attendance at the Portland meetings averages 80 to 100, Good says. About 30 percent are not alumni but, like their hosts, are business managers and professionals in the community.

"This has definitely increased awareness of Willamette in Portland," Good says. "The perception clearly is growing that Willamette has some association with the business community."

From the alumni attending, Good has seen very positive response, too. "They say, wow, it's really a good feeling to see all these alumni, find out about the University, and hear a great speaker."

"It's become a successful part of alumni activities. It can only get better."

SESQUICENTENNIAL ROSE GARDEN

The Willamette University Sesquicentennial Rose Garden, dedicated in May 1992, features 150 rose varieties, one for each year since the founding of the institution in 1842. Roses were purchased (in some cases anonymously) to honor alumni, faculty and family members with a living tribute.

Donors of roses selected after May 31, 1992, will be recognized in the 1992-93 report.

VOLUNTEERS

Willamette University extends grateful appreciation to the alumni, parents and friends who have given so generously of their time during the last year. Student recruitment, class reunions, sesquicentennial events, career networking, fundraising, and alumni club regional activities are among the programs which benefit from ongoing volunteer support.

Consider this list a representative sample of the many alumni and friends who serve as advocates for the University in their communities.

Janene Allman

Janene Allman, cashier in Willamette's business office, believes that, whether it's at work or in their community, people should be more involved and excited about what they are doing.

Allman has volunteered her time and talents many times for Willamette over the past six years. Currently she serves on the Campus Campaign Committee for the University.

Decorations for the Founders' Day Ball during the Sesquicentennial Celebration were organized by Allman, and she created many of them. She worked equally hard on the Willamette Christmas Tree which commanded the second highest bid at an auction to benefit the Boys and Girls Aid Society.

"I like to be involved here at Willamette," Allman said. "It makes you feel more a part of the family."

Willamette University is grateful to the donors who have made contributions during the 1991-92 fiscal year.

Matching gifts from employers have been included when determining the appropriate giving society memberships. Titles have been omitted wherever possible to save space.

If you are a donor but your name does not appear in the 1991-92 President's Report, one of two things may have happened:

1) In the process of recording the 1991-92 gifts and entering them into our computer, we may have made a mistake; or

2) Your gift may have been received in our office after our fiscal year ended May 31, 1992.

Inquiries or requests for further information should be directed to: Laurie Hendersen, Director of Donor Relations, Willamette University, 900 State Street, Salem, OR 97301. (503) 370-6340.
