A TIME TO REFLECT

The President's Message

Reflecting on the year 1990-91 provides Willamette University with an opportunity to take a longer term view as well. President Jerry E. Hudson has completed a decade of leadership, having been the University's president since August 1980; and the University prepares to celebrate its sesquicentennial during 1991-92, having been founded February 1, 1842. Reflection can be beneficial and celebratory, in harmony with looking forward to ensure a bright future in continuity with the proud tradition. Thus, this volume is the annual report of the year June 1, 1990-May 31, 1991, and it also reviews the decade of the 1980s, and reflects Willamette University's first 149 years from 1842-1991. Because of the limitations of space, this report reflects but a few highlights of each period, illustrating a fraction of the total achievements of the many, many outstanding and distinguished faculty, students, administrators, alumni and friends who are part of Willamette University.

The writer of Ecclesiastes contends that "For everything there is a season, and a time for every matter under heaven...." This Annual Report is A Time to Reflect and reveals that this is a season of celebration at Willamette University.

Taking time to reflect is important. The word refers both to showing or giving back images of reality (as a mirror does) and to pondering about their significance.

This 1990-91 Annual Report seeks to reflect some of the stories and accomplishments within the Willamette community this past year and decade, and to reflect upon their importance to individuals, to the institution, and to society. As you reflect on the University and the achievements of its members, I think you will see why this is a season of celebration at Willamette.

This is a season of celebration at Willamette because 1990-91 was an academic year in which an outstanding faculty taught, excellent students learned, and a strong staff facilitated this process. In addition to the fulfillment of these basic objectives, there was specific cause for celebration because:

- A Chemistry professor was selected as Oregon Professor of the Year

- A team of two law students won the National Labor Moot Court competition

- A paper written by Atkinson Graduate School of Management students was chosen as the Best Graduate Student Paper in the United States

- A team of eight undergraduate students won the first place in the International Collegiate Business Competition

- One-third of Willamette's alumni supported the work of their alma mater through financial contributions.

This is a season of celebration at Willamette because the University reached a new plateau of maturity during the past decade:

- The institution's reputation was enhanced, thanks in part to a US News &

World Report designation as best smaller comprehensive university in the West

- Pioneering coursework was added to the curriculum, such as World Views Freshman Seminar, the Center for Dispute Resolution, and the Master of Arts in Teaching program

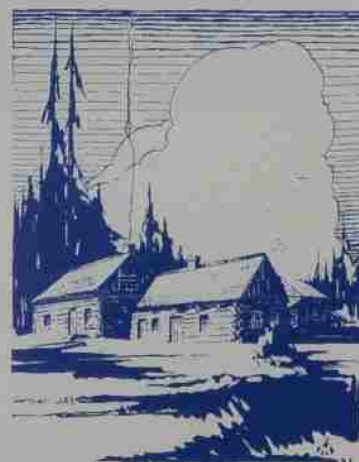

- International education programs were expanded greatly, including three new sister-college relationships and the development of the Tokyo International University of America campus adjacent to Willamette's campus

- Significant improvements were made to the physical plant

- The University consistently attracted more National Merit Scholars as undergraduate students

- Giving by alumni and friends increased dramatically.

And this is a season of celebration at Willamette because the University is approaching a milestone anniversary of 150 years.

Jason Lee's Cabins

The oldest university in the West, Willamette is ready to celebrate a sesquicentennial heritage of carrying out its educational mission with distinction.

The University's roots are traced to January 17, 1842, when Methodist pioneer Jason Lee called a meeting at his house to "Consider the needs for a literary institution." The needs were considered and a public meeting was set for February 1, 1842, where it was unanimously resolved to establish a collegiate institution and a nine-member Board of Trustees was elected.

Considering educational needs and responding quickly has been a hallmark of Willamette University. As we reflect on our sesquicentennial heritage and are prepared to celebrate what has been accomplished over Willamette's first 150 years, we continue to consider the needs for educating bright men and women and seek to respond expeditiously.

This is a season of celebration at Willamette as we take time to reflect on the University's growth and development and on the achievements of its members. A season of celebration indicates that we are pleased with what has been accomplished so far.

Though the Willamette community should be pleased with—and should celebrate—what has been achieved, it should not be satisfied with the status quo or fail to continue considering the needs of this institution. That is why the University is eager to use a portion of this Annual Report to thank publicly its donors—partners who are investing in the institution, its faculty and students “for future generations.”

REFLECTIONS ON TEACHING

Willamette University faculty members have frequently been recognized for their commitment to teaching, as well as for their scholarship and leadership achievements. During 1990-91, Earl Litvrell, professor of accounting at the Athlison Graduate School of Management, and Claudia Burton, professor at the College of Law, received Burlington Northern Foundation Faculty Achievement Awards. George McCawen, professor of history, and Mary Ann Youngren, professor of psychology, received Sears-Roebuck Foundation Teaching Excellence and Campus Leadership Awards. Though their subject matter and teaching approaches are very different, each is imaginative and enthusiastic. To provide an insight into the faculty of which Willamette is so justly proud, these professors have been invited to share with you their personal reflections on teaching.

Claudia Burton

Claudia Burton

I find teaching to be immensely satisfying, both on an intellectual and on a personal level. Imagine having a job that expects you to read constantly about interesting new ideas and that brings you into daily contact with men and women seriously engaged in preparing for their future lives. It is truly a privilege and a pleasure.

I care deeply about teaching, and spend a lot of time thinking about it. As I've reflected on what has seemed to work for me, I've come up with the following list:

1) Enthusiasm—If the professor can't work up some enthusiasm for the material, how can the professor expect the students to care enough about it to put in the necessary work? Enthusiasm is manifested in obvious ways, such as with voice inflection and class comments and questions that directly and indirectly say that the material is important (and why). More subtly, you demonstrate your own judgment that the material is significant by taking the time to master it and to think about effective ways to present it and engage students. You have to "care enough to send your very best."

2) Egalitarianism—Obviously, the teacher-student relationship inside and outside of class is not an equal relationship in many ways. Still, I vividly recall some 30 years after the fact that one of the aspects of my undergraduate experience at Oberlin College that I most appreciated was that Oberlin was a fundamentally egalitarian intellectual community where all members were treated with dignity and respect and the focus was on the quality of the ideas rather than the title of the person. I try to live by this.

3) Encouragement—A number of years ago, I read an article by a Reed professor, giving his thoughts on college teaching. One statement particularly caught my attention, "I have learned to appreciate how deeply students need encouragement as well as, say expertise." Law students, no less than undergraduates, struggle with academic difficulties (particularly in their first year). They also wonder whether law is the right career for them—whether they will find it personally satisfying, whether the time demands of the profession will be too great, and whether they will have to sacrifice personal ethical principles in order to be successful attorneys. On a more immediate level, they wonder whether there will be jobs for them when they graduate. I believe that part of a teacher's responsibility is to be willing to talk and work with students on all of these issues.

4) Enormous amounts of time—To master your field(s) thoroughly to start with, to then stay current in them, to design effective classes (and to rethink and redesign them), to adopt new texts for course use, and to make yourself available many hours a week to your students for consultations related to academic or other matters—all this takes an amount of time unimaginable to someone who has not taught. The rewards of being a teacher are great, but they do not come cheaply.

Earl Littrell

Teaching and lofty remarks easily pair—philosophy, strategy, cultural significance—but I want to talk about how I feel about teaching.

I think I can hear the “blink” of a light bulb switching on in a student’s brain. That sound is music, especially when it comes right after I say something like, “Cash flows are rightly linked to accrual flows by current assets and current liabilities.” Cash flows are vital to all economic activity. So are revenues, expenses, and earnings—accruals. While music to me, getting the “blinks” of understanding on these topics is so important to our economy and culture that a few of us work full time on the task. I have that privilege. It feels good.

Ever take the time to say thanks to someone who made a difference in your life? An advisor, a professor, whoever? To people who love to teach, such thanks after a few years or decades are the dividends on the teaching investment. Take the time—you’ll feel better, and we certainly will. The people who love to teach give up significant money income, and these dividends are the other side of the “blink” of understanding.

Professors were students once, too. I have taken the time to thank several of my “people who made a difference.” One of them was in tears as I left, happy tears I’m pretty sure. My colleagues claim the tears were over someone who had real promise a long time ago ending up as an accountant! Of course that’s part of our long series of jokes on each other, where you customize the victim—accountant, economist, lawyer, statistician, dean, and so forth.

After the “blinks” and dividends, I feel strongly about change, forecasting it, helping to manage it. Call it the soapbox factor. Many of my fellow accounting academics teach and advise as if the next 40 years in accounting will be just like the last 40. Right! Atkinson and Willamette give me the opportunity and responsibility to look out into the future in advising and teaching. For example, when I came in 1976, I began advising students that auditing’s attraction as a career would decline from the twin pressures of adverse litigation and vanishing profits. Fifteen years later it was and is good advice, although I lament what’s happening to auditing. And my opportunity and responsibility to look into the future and to advise and teach accordingly continue.

Another forecast I made in 1976, in choosing to come to Atkinson, is that a teaching career dependent on tax support would be a problem. Unhappily for many professors at state schools, that one has come true. I have strong feelings of gratitude for the support and stability of a private university provided by Willamette and many, many people who pay tuition and who contribute generously. Thank you very much.

George McCowen

There are two essential ingredients in teaching: love of the subject matter and a love of the students. The subject matter of history has continued to fascinate me since my first course in Western Civilization almost 40 years ago; and perhaps, even before that, for I brought to the course an interest in the subject matter. Basically the same questions continue to fascinate me: What does it all mean, this human experience? What can we know of the past? What of this past experience of mankind can be captured in the discipline of history? What are the origins of the American historical experience? What is unique about it? What and why in an endless succession of questions. I am not at all sure that I have discovered

Earl Littrell

any answers to these fundamental questions; though I should like to believe that in pursuing them I have learned something about human experience and grown in understanding of the study of history and of the illusive past.

As I have explored different facets of the past, it has been a great satisfaction to have the companionship of students. I hope that I have been able to introduce at least some of them to what David Carradine has called "the pleasure of the past." I am very indebted to them for the questions they have posed and the insights they have brought to our common endeavor.

The relationship between students and teachers is not without its traumas, as well as its satisfactions. There is the matter of evaluations and grading. One must sometimes offend the egos of those who are not as talented in a subject field as they think they are. One must attempt to guide these students to a more realistic appraisal of their own abilities and to improvement in their performance. Sometimes this may mean encouraging them in other disciplines or endeavors in life where they have greater talents. In all of this there is the realization that you might be wrong in appraisal of abilities or that you have not inspired students to their best performance. There is some consolation, however, in realizing that the University is a community of scholars, and when I have failed to reach students, others of my colleagues have often succeeded.

And then there is the joyous other side of the coin. Sometimes one is able to see more in students than they see in themselves and to convince them of their talents. In short, one is able to help them realize that they are in fact better than they think they are. When this happens it is the greatest joy and satisfaction of teaching. A former student of mine has written, "At the time I took the class from you, I was a struggling college senior, with low self-esteem while burdened by severe mental problems. I was not an ambitious student, having convinced myself that I was incapable of work of any quality. Somehow your class awakened something in me that suggested for me that I was capable of much better. You planted a seed of intellectual curiosity in me that has served me in good stead these last 20 years..."

This is the greatest satisfaction of teaching, when one is able to awaken feelings of self-worth in a student.

My ideal as a teacher and a historian has always been, within my modest capacity, to emulate the words of the 19th century French historian Jules Michelet:

"If I had, as an historian, any special merit to sustain me on a level with my illustrious predecessors, I should owe it to teaching, which for me was friendship. Those great historians have been brilliant, judicious, and profound; as for me, I have loved more."

Mary Ann Youngren

It is more than a bit ironic that I've been asked to write this essay in August, a month I traditionally reserve for living the simplest of lives as the "caretaker" for my friends' rustic and wonderfully cozy beachfront cabin on the Oregon coast. These precious last days of summer are filled with long walks on the beach with my faithful border collie who asks only that I throw sticks for her to retrieve in the surf. Even chores provide a refreshing change of pace from academia: clearing brush and stacking firewood demand physical energy and produce directly observable results. And then in the evenings I curl up with a good book—to be read purely for pleasure—in front of a warm fire. How far away Willamette seems!

But with increasing frequency the local radio station plays "back to school" commercials, and I find myself cringing, knowing that—as usual—I've procrastinated at putting together course syllabi. And yet, only yesterday I discreetly opened a brand new box of Crayola crayons while browsing through a Rockaway Beach store. As always, just one sniff brought back the familiar, tantalizing sense of excitement at the beginning of another school year. What is it that calls me back to another year of teaching? Surely the answer lies beyond the nagging sight of incomplete syllabi reminding of contractual obligations, on the one hand, and the nostalgia-filled eagerness evoked by my Crayola-sniffing ritual on the other.

As I reflect on 12 years of teaching at Willamette, what matters most are my personal relationships with students and the connections we together make with our subject matter. Consider with me for a moment the potential scope of those connections, given the oft-stated goal of psychology: understanding human behavior. It is hard for me to imagine a field that is more inherently interdisciplinary. With its historical roots in physiology and philosophy, psychology has strong ties with both the natural sciences and the humanities. And I am fortunate enough to teach courses that allow me to work with students in pursuing both of these interdisciplinary paths: e.g., Clinical & Abnormal Psychology with its ever-increasing emphasis on brain-behavior relationships, including genetic and biochemical factors in the major mental disorders, and Theories of Personality, in which the central question can be construed as broadly as "What is human nature?"

And then there are all the potential connections to be discovered at a more personal level. I suspect many students are initially drawn to psychology by a natural curiosity about that most fascinating of creatures, the human being—i.e., us! But that curiosity can too easily be squelched in a discipline which earnestly, and sometimes naively, strives to be "scientific" and considers subjectivity an obstacle to be avoided or at least controlled for in its pursuit of knowledge.

Finding creative ways to nurture the student's curiosity, to "rehumanize" our study of psychology, is what I find most challenging and most gratifying. For me, truly magical moments occur when students are willing to overcome the temptation to distance themselves emotionally from our subject matter, to get beyond "we vs. they" thinking, and to engage themselves fully in learning in a more deeply internalized way. Some examples:

- Students who courageously volunteer to work with patients at the state hospital and who, in the process, learn that the symptoms of schizophrenia are not merely a textbook list but also that patients do not come in neat little diagnostic categories and that how we define abnormality is a very real and troubling issue.
- Students who diligently struggle with the complexities and mystical tone of Carl Jung's theory and discover new ways of approaching their own inner sources of creativity: through their art, through music, through their response to myths, and especially through their dreams.
- Students who, through empathic reading of theorists such as Karen Horney, Viktor Frankl, and Sigmund Freud (yes, even Freud), discover new insights that enrich their self-understanding, as reflected in their essays and in conversations outside class—sometimes weeks, even months after the class is over.

Magical moments ... moments when the student evolving research interests—from cognitive-behavioral treatment of depression to sabbatical study at the C.G. Jung Institute!

And so, with another whiff from the Crayola box (which I couldn't resist buying), I'll tackle those

and I really connect, when we both learn in ways that enrich our lives. I know those moments won't occur every day. But the ingredients are there: bright, inquisitive students who may sometimes appear overly grade-conscious but who genuinely do want to learn; faculty colleagues across disciplines who are such a rich source of intellectual stimulation and emotional support; a university that has generously supported my rather eclectic and continually course syllabi, knowing that this special place will be here for me when I need the solitude and serenity of a beach retreat. A sniff from my nearly empty tube of suntan lotion will remind me of that. Lest I be accused of encouraging dangerous sniffing, let me remind you that neither crayons nor suntan lotion are illegal or toxic. But they—and what they represent for me—are surely powerfully addicting!

STUDENT PROFILES

Willamette is a small university, offering students a strong liberal arts college as well as two professional schools. As such, Willamette is built on a commitment to the liberal arts and is engaged in career preparation and enriching the lives of students. Nearly one-third of Willamette's students are now graduate students, enrolled in the College of Law, the Atkinson Graduate School of Management, or the Master of Arts in Teaching program within the College of Liberal Arts. The establishment of Tokyo International University of America has added yet another dimension to Willamette's student body. Students from TIUA can take classes at WU and Willamette's Japanese language students are able to take classes at TIUA, broadening their college experience. There is no "average" Willamette student, but the profiles which follow provide a glimpse of some who are representative.

Steve Lee

Steve Lee '91 is one of a number of Willamette students who, after receiving their undergraduate degree, enter the master of arts in teaching program, or cross the street to begin graduate school at either the College of Law, or the Atkinson School.

Lee is in his first year at the College of Law.

"I've always been interested in law," Lee said, "but I'm not setting a narrow focus on how I'll use my law degree. I don't know what specific field I'll go into. It could be a law practice, or it could be politics. I'm not sure."

Lee worked in student government as a senator, worked in the student activities office as publicity coordinator, artist, and secretary, was a member of two honor societies—Phi Eta Sigma and Alpha Lambda Delta, and was awarded a Trustee Scholarship for law school.

Lee, who came to Willamette from Parkrose High School in Portland, majored in political science and worked as a tutor for the World Views Program.

One area at Willamette that Lee feels could use some improvement is cultural diversity.

"Many students of color are attracted to Willamette," Lee said, "but eventually leave because they get tired of being 'the only' Black or Native American."

Aaron McGrath

Aaron McGrath '91 came to Willamette from the Bay area in California to study political science. "I got interested in politics in high school," he said, "and I would eventually like to go into public service."

Though McGrath did some lobbying at the State Capitol during his years at Willamette, his real interest lies with the federal government. "I'm more attracted to constitutional issues at the national level," he said. Law school is a possibility in a few years, he added.

First, however, he'd like to spend some time driving around the country, possibly looking into VISTA—Volunteers in Service to America.

Even while a student, McGrath was involved in service. He was Freshman Glee manager, the student representative on the search committee for the College of Liberal Arts dean, and a student senator. He also managed the Bistro, served on the Academic Council as a student representative, was on the Liberal Arts Committee of the Board of Trustees, and was the chair of the committee for the Tracy Hoffman Run sponsored by Kappa Sigma.

When the studying and committee work start to wear on him, McGrath turns to music for relaxation. He plays the trumpet, piano, and guitar.

Rick Mitchell

More than 15 years ago, stuck for an hour and a half in a traffic jam on the Bronx Highway, Rick Mitchell M'91 decided to move to Oregon. He had just graduated with a degree in psychology from Antioch College in Ohio two years before and decided his future lay on the West Coast.

When asked what he did for the 15 years following his move, Mitchell will tell you it's easier to list what he didn't do. He managed a stereo retail and repair shop; co-founded and managed a company that manufactured electronic musical instruments, was a partner in a farm raising sheep, cows and pigs; was a consultant and did technical support in electronics; owned and operated a limousine service; and bought and sold real estate.

Steve Lee

In 1989 he decided he wanted the credentials and theoretical background to go with his experience. "I had a family and I felt the need for career security," he said. Mitchell has three children, a 13-year-old daughter and two sons, ages four and one.

At Willamette he distinguished himself as an outstanding student. A paper he helped produce for a public finance class project, titled Sales Tax Designs: A Study of Alternatives, won a number of national awards, including the 1991 award for best budgeting and financial management paper from the American Society for Public Administration. Mitchell was also chosen as one of 1991's Ten Best Business Students by Oregon Business Magazine.

While a student at Willamette, Mitchell served as a summer intern for M & M Stores Inc., a Portland-based pharmaceutical distributor which serves area nursing homes as well as operating retail outlets in the state. M & M—which has since changed its name to Maples Corporation—liked Mitchell's work and hired him as chief financial officer.

Mariko Wilson

Mariko Wilson got into music naturally. Her mother was a music teacher and Wilson started lessons early.

"I took guitar beginning in the third grade," she said, "but I was really bad." It didn't take her long to discover percussion instruments.

Wilson '90-'91 would like to open her own studio and teach drums. Future plans also include graduate school for a doctorate in percussion performance. Someday she would like to be able to teach percussion at the college level and play in a symphony orchestra, although originally she came to Willamette to study music therapy.

As a result of her practicing six hours each day, numerous awards have been given to Wilson. She has earned the Swindells' award, and played in the first of the Irene Gerlinger Swindells concerts featuring 20th century music.

It takes learning several instruments to play percussion, Wilson said. The four main areas of study are drums, timpani, snare drum, and mallet instruments, such as the marimba, xylophone, bells, and vibraphone. She also has learned to play triangles, tambourines, cymbals and Latin percussion.

"The hardest part of being a percussionist," she sighs, "is carrying all that junk around."

Laura Zinniker

Laura Zinniker '91 spent the summer working on her undergraduate research project on immigration problems for Arabs and racism in France. Now she's in France teaching English.

Her degree in French and international studies

has been put to good use.

After she returns from France, Zinniker plans to attend graduate school to study administrative and policy analysis in education, or international education and cultural awareness in education. She has been accepted at the University of Oregon, University of Washington, and Stanford.

Zinniker's leadership abilities brought her numerous awards while at Willamette. She was a Glee manager, student representative on the student affairs committee for the Board of Trustees, Bistro manager, student senator, and member of the dining commons committee.

Awards she has earned include AAUW, Jessie West, and Collins Scholar. She is also a youth leader and Sunday School teacher at her church.

CURRICULUM INNOVATION

From the perspective of the whole decade, curriculum changes at Willamette have been dramatic. Yet such changes reflect careful planning and attention to academic substance, not trendiness. Early in the decade President Hudson proposed that Willamette consider establishing a business economics major, take greater account of computers in the curriculum and place greater emphasis on international education. All have been accomplished.

In addition, a common freshman experience called World Views has been established. At the graduate level, the Center for Dispute Resolution was established, and an experimental Master of Arts in Teaching Program has been created, tested and adopted.

World Views

The World Views program was designed to serve as a central core course to help freshmen understand that different cultures see the world in very different ways, and its development was preceded by several years of planning. This interdisciplinary seminar course is now required of all freshmen.

Rather than develop a general reading list encompassing Western Civilization, it was decided to have narrower themes which changed every four years. Associate CLA Dean Ken Nolley said the decision to periodically change the focus of the curriculum was to keep interest and excitement in the program high, and also to bring more people into the program.

This is a text-centered course held in small seminar settings with 17 or 18 students. Taught by 23 faculty members from 12 departments, these discussion sections meet for three hours each week to analyze the primary texts which have included Mill's On Liberty, Darwin's Origin of the Species, and novels such as Hard Times, The Home and the World, (an Indian novel concerning the effects of British colonialism) and Nervous Conditions (a Zimbabwean novel, also about the effects of the British colonial presence) and Frankenstein. Emphasis is on careful reading, competent writing, thoughtful discussion, and intellectual community.

Willamette's World Views curriculum finished its first four-year cycle covering Victorian England in 1990-91. The new emphasis, developed to begin in 1991-92, is Latin America, with readings by Octavio Paz, Carlos Fuentes, and Isabel Allende

Center for Dispute Resolution

When Willamette University's Center for Dispute Resolution was founded in 1984, it was one of the few such teaching institutions in the nation and the only one in the Northwest.

The Center was started with grant money from the M. J. Murdock Charitable Trust of Vancouver, Washington. It focuses on alternative means of dispute resolution rather than taking the historic position of litigation. At the College of Law, it was decided that it was time for lawyers to focus on all the ways that exist for resolving disputes, including not only litigation, but arbitration, mediation, and negotiation.

The center began with four goals: to educate law students in all the ways of resolving conflicts; to do research and publications in areas of dispute resolution; to provide continuing and community education in the areas of dispute resolution; and to do public service in dispute resolution.

Director Ross Runkel said the program has not only met these goals, but it has been so successful that most classes are now over-enrolled. One-third of the graduating law students in 1991 earned certificates in dispute resolution. Several students attending the Atkinson Graduate School of Management are also enrolled in the certificate program, he said.

Courses offered in the program include: dispute resolution, negotiation workshop, mediation workshop, arbitration, interviewing and counseling, administrative law, international law and dispute resolution, labor law, pre-trial litigation, public sector collective bargaining, and worker's compensation.

In 1985 the Center introduced an 18-credit program that recognized the need for graduate level work in the area of dispute prevention and resolution, and responded to the interests of non-degree seeking students. It is believed to be the first program of its kind in the nation sponsored by a law school.

The Center also provides service through Willamette Legal Clinics, training and certification for organizations, and conferences and summer programs which are open to the community.

Business Economics

A degree in Business Economics was proposed as a means of staying attractive to the one-third of all high school graduates who said they wanted to major in business. This was seen as a strategy to help support the liberal arts program. The new major was approved in 1983 and graduated its first students in 1985.

International Education

In 1965 Willamette and Tokyo International University in Kawagoe City, Japan, developed a sister university relationship. TIU was then known as the International College of Commerce and Economics. By 1981 Willamette had an international program operating in Europe and was sending about 20 students to Japan for a semester every other year. Since that time, international education at Willamette has seen remarkable growth, much of that growth taking place along the Pacific Rim.

Several events in 1985 focused attention on the Far East. Willamette added two new sister universities—Kookmin University in Seoul, South Korea, and Xiamen University in Xiamen, People's Republic of China; the College of Liberal Arts added courses in the Chinese language; and the College of Law offered students four weeks of intensive summer study at the East China Institute of Politics in Shanghai. Professor James Nafziger now takes a group of students each year to study at the institute, giving them a unique opportunity to witness a developing legal system which is still recovering from the Cultural Revolution.

International Education expanded into the Soviet Union by establishing a sister university relationship with Simferopol State University, Simferopol, U.S.S.R., in 1987. Since then there have been a number of exchanges of students and professors between the two universities.

In 1989 Tokyo International University and Willamette took one more step in their relationship when Tokyo International University of America was built across 12th Street. This new campus allows Willamette and TIUA students to share their cultures on a day-to-day basis.

Master of Arts in Teaching

The Master of Arts in Teaching program has been so successful that enrollment has almost doubled each year the program has been in existence.

Willamette's program was a leader in what was to become a national revolution in teacher training. This revolution grew out of years of mounting criticism of public schools.

Studies concluded that one of the problems facing education in the United States was inadequate preparation of teachers in the subjects they would be teaching. In 1985 a study done by the Oregon Legislature recommended that teacher training be shifted from its traditional "vocationally-oriented" approach to a professional program requiring five years of study.

Many of the recommendations of the committee appointed by the Legislature to do this study were adopted by the state Teacher Standards and Practices Commission and became effective in January 1988.

In 1989 Willamette enrolled three students in its pilot Master of Arts in Teaching program. For 1991 there were more than 50 students enrolled in that program. The traditional undergraduate education program was terminated in May 1990.

Bottom: Eaton Hall in 1983 after renovation was completed.

1981

E.S. Collins Science Center, built in 1941, was renovated. The project cost more than $4 million and took just over a year to complete.

The Southern Pacific railroad tracks which had run through the campus for 110 years were removed.

1982

Eaton Hall, originally constructed in 1907, was renovated.

1983

The Mill Race was re-routed from its straight path along the back of the Fine Arts Building to a meandering course through campus.

1985

The Mark O. Hatfield Library was begun; it was dedicated in 1986.

Jackson Plaza and the Whipple Clock Tower were constructed.

Lausanne Hall, built in 1920, was remodeled.

1987

The Martha Springer Botanical Garden was dedicated. It is named for Martha Springer, biology professor who retired in 1981 after 34 years at Willamette University. The garden has numerous varieties of plants from the Northwest.

The Helen Simpson Jackson Chair in International Management was established at the Atkinson School.

1988

Pulitzer-prize-winning cartoonist Jeff MacNelly and writer Joyce Carol Oates spoke on campus as part of the Atkinson Lecture Series.

A Master of Arts in Teaching pilot program began with three students. Enrollment tripled the second year and has almost doubled each year since.

1989

The first exchange professor and student from Simferopol State University spent spring semester at Willamette.

Tokyo International University of America opened across 12th Street from Willamette, and Japanese students arrived for their first semester in May. TIUA is a branch campus of Tokyo International University in Kawagoe, Japan, which has been Willamette's sister university since 1965. Keynote speakers for the formal dedication in September were Mike Mansfield, former U. S. senator and ambassador to Japan; and Masao Junihito, Japanese statesman and professor at TIU in Japan.

Atkinson speakers were writer and poet Maya Angelou and writer Kurt Vonnegut in the spring. In the fall, Stephen Jay Gould gave an address on Charles Darwin to the freshman as part of World Views and an Atkinson lecture.

The Antoinette and Mark O. Hatfield Fountain, a gift from Mrs. Dorothy L. and the late Charles E. Cook, was completed and dedicated.

An Undergraduate Research Grant program was initiated, enabling 14 students to pursue summer research projects.

REFLECTING ON A DECADE OF FINANCIAL STABILITY

Willamette University's firm financial foundation continues to enable the institution to make spending and investment decisions primarily in terms of sound educational objectives and adherence to mission.

The relationship between fiscal strength and stability and educational excellence serves Willamette well. While other private colleges and universities are experiencing enrollment declines requiring them to lay off faculty and use endowment income to make up shortfalls in tuition revenue, and tax-supported institutions are experiencing tighter state funding, Willamette is in the enviable position of being able to strengthen its educational environment.

Soon after Jerry E. Hudson became president in 1980, he said that raising faculty salaries should be a priority. Since then, the amount spent on full-time instructional salaries, including both new positions and salary increases, has risen by 176 percent. This represents real progress in improving salaries, with the increase more than doubling the consumer price index. Employee benefits have also improved.

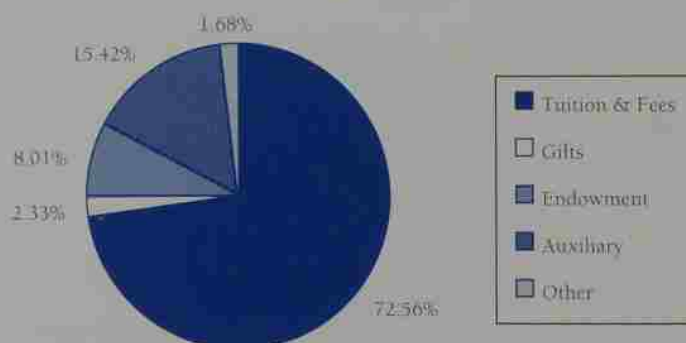

Among the President's proposals in 1981 was a review of financial aid policies. The result was a redistribution of financial aid dollars. The President also asked for consideration of a merit-based financial aid program to complement the need-based aid. Thanks to generous funding from The Collins Foundation and several trustees, merit-based financial aid has been added without reducing the need-based program. This has been one of the primary reasons for the significant increase in the average SAT scores of entering freshmen.

The University's endowment, valued at over $80 million, is consistently listed as one of the largest for any college or university in the Northwest, and is invested to produce income for the operating budget as well as to have the principal keep pace with inflation.

During the last five years, total gifts and grants to the University have exceeded $36.8 million. Since 1980, nearly $68 million in gifts and grants has been received. Giving to the University's Annual

REVENUES BY SOURCE

Funds increased again last year, with 33.04 percent of Willamette alumni contributing; alumni giving to the Annual Fund has increased from 18 percent in 1981.

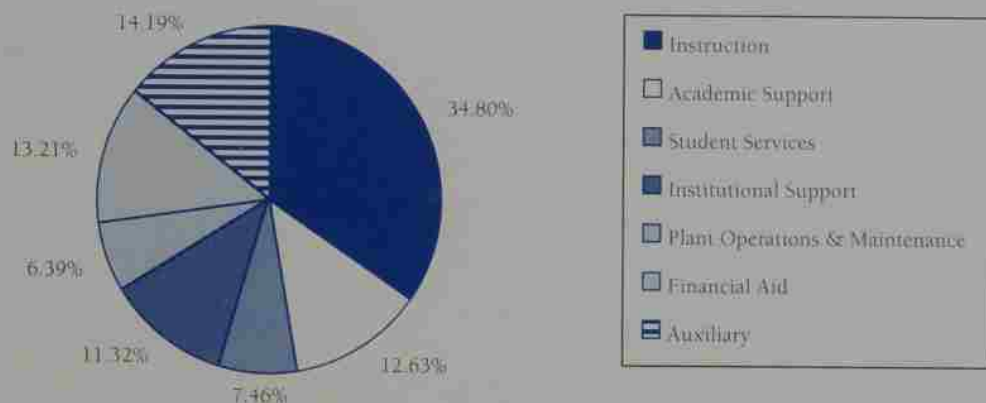

Willamette's operating budget has been balanced for 14 consecutive years.

Willamette did not attain its educational or financial strength by resting on its laurels, nor can it do so now. The $50-million Sesquicentennial Campaign which is underway will strengthen the University's endowment, as well as meet other needs and goals. It is part of the planning necessary to extend Willamette's stable financial legacy into the future.

PAULUS

The historic photographs on this page are from the Paulus Collection, a gift of glass plate photo negatives which were given to Willamette University by Bill Paulus L'58 and his wife, Norma Peterson Paulus L'62. Bill Paulus found them in the home of his uncle Fred Paulus L'26, who died in 1989. The photos were taken by the late brothers Otto Paulus '18 L'25 and Robert Paulus between approximately 1914 and 1920.

Much of the collection depicts Willamette, it also includes a glimpse of life in Salem, and elsewhere in Oregon, during that era.

In addition to providing a window to Willamette's history, the collection has provided a hands-on learning opportunity for Lisa Bridges '91. An art history major with an interest in photography and an ambition to make a career as a curator, Bridges used one of Willamette's Undergraduate Research Grants to work on cleaning and repairing about 1,000 glass negatives ranging in size from three by four inches to eight by ten.

SPONENBURGH

The art works pictured on this page are from a collection presented to Willamette University to enable students, now and in the future, to study and learn firsthand from art objects, not just from slides of them.

The Mark and Janeth Hogue Sponenburgh Collection contains more than 200 works, and is a gift from the Sponenburghs.

The Collection was first opened to the campus and the community during an exhibit in the Hallie Brown Ford Gallery during January, February and March of 1991.

In a statement accompanying the collection, the Sponenburghs wrote: "In our view, the purpose of this study collection is to make available to serious students of the liberal arts, authentic works that can give insight relative to cultures, periods, and styles, as well as the functions, materials and techniques [used in the production of the art.]"

ANNUAL GIFTS REPORT

After the president's report on the achievements of the academic year, I welcome this opportunity to share with you the record of giving to Willamette during 1990-91. In light of the year's events and the experience of many others in higher education, we all have reason to be especially gratified by Willamette's success.

Early in 1990, when the budget projections and goals for the 1990-91 year were set, neither an economic recession nor a war in the Middle East was anticipated. The faculty, administrators, and Trustees of the University made an assessment of the University's needs and the budget was built to meet those needs, including new faculty positions and new investments in materials, equipment, and plant. The budget was a prudent, careful one, but it was also a leap of faith.

It strikes me that this is nothing new for Willamette. Had the founders waited until the "right time" to found the University, 150 years of accomplishment and service would have been lost. Waller Hall was begun during the Civil War; the fragile institution was somehow sustained through the economic disasters of the 1890s and 1930s; the dislocations of two world wars were overcome. Over the years, again and again, the decision was made to go ahead.

And, over the years, you and others like you have supported that decision. Through your gifts to the annual fund and to the capital and endowment projects of the University, you have made an investment in the aspirations of others. Consistently, each year since 1980, more alumni have chosen to support Willamette financially and more have increased the size of their individual gifts. The base of support for the University has expanded significantly. This Annual Report reflects the impact of that support on Willamette's academic programs and learning environment.

I join the students, faculty, administrators, and Trustees of the University in thanking you for your generosity and inviting you to continue that partnership that has accomplished so much.

Sincerely,

William Swindells

William Swindells, Chairman
Willamette University
Board of Trustees

JASON LEE SOCIETY

The Jason Lee Society is the highest of Willamette's annual donor recognition groups. Named for the principal founder of Willamette University, this organization honors individuals who contributed $1,000 or more to the University during the last fiscal year. Lee himself made the ultimate sacrifice, dying while traveling in search of financial support. His entire estate was left to Willamette and his gift continues to affect the lives of young people attending his beloved school almost 150 years later.

WALLER SOCIETY

The Waller Society is named for Alvan F. Waller, who carried on the tradition of service and devotion begun by Jason Lee. This society honors individuals who contributed $500 to $999 to Willamette. It was Alvan Waller, as the University's agent, who bore the responsibility for developing the financial well-being of Willamette as the University grew. It was he who found the funds and supervised the construction of what is now known as Waller Hall, completed in 1867.

STEP SOCIETY

The Step Society commemorates the historic old step at Waller Hall, worn by the feet of so many people over time. The society honors individuals who contributed $250 to $499 to Willamette during the last fiscal year. Contributors to the Step Society provide vital support for the academic footing needed by new generations of students who cross Willamette's threshold.

MARY EYRE SCHOLARSHIP

The Mary E. Eyre Scholarship established to honor Dr. Mary E. Eyre '18 provided assistance during 1990-91 to Rob Groenendaal '94. Rob is a graduate of North Salem High School and a member of the cross country team. Older brother Rick '84 also participated in cross country during his time at Willamette. Friends, family, and former students of Dr. Eyre who give to the fund honor her contributions to education in Salem in a special way by providing scholarship support to outstanding local students like Rob.

LEGEND

loyal and active alumnus. *Lloyd Grod chaired his 50th class reunion and spearheaded creation of the Class of 1932 Endowed Scholarship Fund. This year Lloyd and his wife, Elsie, established a gift annuity to provide lifetime income to Elsie.

The Lloyd and Elsie Grod Scholarship Fund will be created with the bequest after her death. The scholarship is designated for student athletes participating in track, cross-country, soccer, swimming, volleyball, tennis, golf or softball who have demonstrated outstanding academic achievement.

(Editor's note: Mr. Grod died December 10, 1991.)

R.A. BOOTH SOCIETY

The R.A. Booth Society was established in 1990 to recognize all known planned gift donors. In the spirit of the society's namesake, these individual members provide for future generations at Willamette University.

R.A. Booth Society members have affirmed that "not unto ourselves alone are we born" by establishing planned gifts which benefit the University. These gifts include bequests, gifts of life insurance policies, life income trusts and life estates. Others have made similar provisions for the University but have preferred that their names not be listed here.

If you have named Willamette University in your will or as a beneficiary in a life insurance policy, but are not listed please let us know. We would like to express our thanks.

arne Nunn, Ed Cone, and Al Ferrin spearheaded the Class of 1941's 50-Year Reunion gift campaign to establish an endowed Freshman Lectureship Fund. Together with their classmates they hope to raise $150,000, which would provide $9,000 annually. The Class of 1941 Freshman Lectureship would enable Willamette to invite a recognized speaker or speakers to be a part of the freshman experience program, which seeks to provide a rigorous academic grounding for all first-year CLA students.

he undergraduate research program has proven to be an excellent addition to the educational opportunities available through the College of Liberal Arts. It brings faculty and students together outside the classroom and enables them to work and learn together. This distinctive program enables the University to attract and retain excellent students. A generous gift this year from alumnus and trustee Allan E. Voigt '48, provided support for this valuable complement to the liberal arts curriculum.

ark Teppola '60 (Board of Trustees member since 1980) and his wife, Melody, established the Dr. Ivan Lowell Endowed Scholarship Fund in 1976 to be awarded to an outstanding history major for use during the student's senior year at Willamette. It is a measure of their high regard for Dr. Lowell that the Teppolas took out a personal loan to complete their commitment of funds to establish the scholarship. The scholarship is a living memorial to the many years of devoted service given by Dr. Lowell and his wife, Rose. Dr. Lowell's teaching in the history department from 1937-1966 had a significant impact on his students.

"Ivan Lowell was not only a superb teacher but my dear friend for many, many years. His wit, charm, humor and vast intelligence truly shaped my outlook on our world and memory of him will endure within me as long as I live." —George P. Gutekunst, class of 1941.

The scholarship established by the Teppolas has helped 17 students so far—an impressive tribute to Dr. Lowell's memory. To quote recipient Wendy (Petersen) Boring '89, "this award was a great honor and encouragement to me. Receiving this scholarship and knowing how and why it was established has made me want to establish a similar one someday."

lasting tribute to longtime Willamette University administrator Jerry Whipple was created through the establishment of the E. Jerry Whipple scholarship fund in his memory. Financial assistance will be awarded to a deserving student in the College of Liberal Arts with at least junior standing, demonstrated financial need, and exceptional moral character and leadership qualities. Thoughtful gifts from family and friends will provide for future generations of students at Willamette.

SPONENBURGH COLLECTION AND LECTURESHIP

Assembled by Mark and the late Janeth Hogue Spokenburgh and presented to the Willamette University art department for student and faculty study in the context of the liberal arts curriculum, the collection, with more than 200 pieces, represents a breadth of periods, cultures, and media and provides the basis for an expanded University collection in the future. The Spokenburgh Lectureship Fund will annually bring a recognized artist, art historian, and/or critical commentator to campus to make a major address and provide insights to students pursuing studies in art.

Contributions from local businesses to the Salem Annual Fund provided support for graduates of Salem-area high schools attending Willamette. Former mayor of Salem Tom Neilsen '81, delivered the keynote address at the Salem Annual Fund luncheon held in January. Over the past six years, nearly $110,000 has been given to support local students.

In July 1990, the Atkinson Graduate School of Management received a $40,000 grant from the State Farm Insurance Companies Foundation to help establish a Minority Student Scholarship Fund. The contribution, combined with other scholarship resources, will help the School identify, recruit and partially underwrite graduate management education for highly qualified minority students.

OREGON INDEPENDENT COLLEGE FOUNDATION

The Oregon Independent College Foundation solicits support from the business community on a state-wide basis for eight of Oregon's private liberal arts colleges. Willamette received more than $256,000 from these generous donors in 1990-91.

ammy L. English '82-'87, participated as a "loaned executive" for the Oregon Independent College Foundation's College-Business Weeks campaign. An attorney in the Group Insurance Division of Standard Insurance Company in Portland, she called on businesses to "spread the word" about the value of independent higher education in Oregon. More than $256,000 was distributed to Willamette this year as one of the eight colleges participating in this consortium.

DOLLY PARTON CONCERT

Dolly Parton's 1990 Oregon State Fair performance raised $40,000 for Willamette's Athletic Department. The funds will be used to buy equipment for the proposed fitness addition to Sparks Center. She is pictured here with Heine Fountain '77, Athletic Director Bill Trenberth and his wife, Maxine. Fountain is a former Bearcat football player now living in Hawaii, who made the arrangements for the benefit concert.

Willamette University is grateful to the donors who have made contributions during the 1990-91 fiscal year.

Matching gifts from employers have been included when determining the appropriate giving society memberships. Titles have been omitted wherever possible to save space.

If you are a donor but your name does not appear in the 1990-91 President's Report, one of two things may have happened:

1) In the process of recording the 1990-91 gifts and entering them into our computer, we may have made a mistake; or

2) Your gift may have been received in our office after our fiscal year ended May 31, 1991.

Inquiries or requests for further information should be directed to:

*Laurie Green, Director of Donor Relations, Willamette University,
900 State Street, Salem, OR 97301.
(503) 370-6340.*

Biology Professor Grant Thorsett assists Jennifer Kirhman '91 of Colorado Springs, Colorado, as she places DNA into an electrophoresis chamber for analysis.
