President's Message

As a fledgling historian in the 1960s, I remember being told that history never begins a new chapter; only historians do. Despite that advice, I have sought in each year's Annual Report to share with you a new chapter from the Willamette story, divided neatly into twelve-month packages.

But the events, challenges, and accomplishments at Willamette do not lend themselves to such easy compartmentalization. The theme of this Annual Report — Works in Progress — recognizes this fact.

"Works in Progress" refers to actions that are a part of a continuing pattern — endeavors that constitute improvement in a specific direction but that fall short of an ultimate goal. Education is an ongoing process and the University, like its students and graduates, has a lifelong commitment to learning, development and growth.

Willamette constantly seeks to enhance and strengthen its academic offerings and environment. This motivates us to attract and retain excellent faculty, administrators and staff; to make improvements in curriculum, programs, and the physical plant; and to seek the partnership of alumni and friends in all facets of the University.

During 1988-89, students, faculty, the curriculum, financial resources and the physical plant were each "works in progress."

The most important works in progress are Willamette's 2,100 students. They are not only the University's product, but are also full partners in the educational process. The worth of Willamette can be measured by the progress each of our "works" makes in achieving his or her full potential. And the progress does not conclude with graduation, the "completion" of one's time as a student. Because the impact of the University experience should be felt throughout life, a graduate continues to be one of our works in progress.

Another example of works in progress is Willamette's faculty. During 1988-89, 15 faculty members took sabbaticals and more than 40 embarked on projects designed to enhance their teaching, research and scholarship. Educational growth is every bit as important for those who teach and serve as role models for our students. I, too, enjoyed a sabbatical during the latter part of the academic year, which I found to be a refreshing, renewing, and revitalizing time for this work in progress!

By "works in progress," I also mean that strides were made toward several important academic goals. First, new educational opportunities were created last year through the establishment of an undergraduate research grants program. And second, Willamette's international programs — a focus of development throughout this decade — were strengthened further: a new Pacific Rim study tour (China, Japan and Korea) was inaugurated; two Russians spent a semester on campus from sister-institution Simferopol State University; and Tokyo International University of America established its campus adjacent to Willamette. These milestones were significant beginnings that remain as works in progress.

The continued financial stability of the University is another way to think of "works in progress." The balanced operating budget in 1988-89 is another in a long string that goes back to the mid-1970s. It reflects strong enrollments, increased financial support from alumni, trustees and friends, and good management. The number of alumni giving to the Annual Fund has increased each year since 1980 and last year climbed over thirty percent. While Willamette's financial base is strong, we look for further growth as a means to provide an even better education for our students.

Finally, a number of construction signs dotted the campus during 1988-89, signaling other works in progress. Throughout the 1980s, there has been an emphasis on improving Willamette's facilities. As a result, Collins Science Center, Eaton Hall, Lausanne Hall, Baxter Hall, Smith Auditorium and Smullin Hall have all been renovated, while a magnificent new library has been constructed. During this past year, Waller Hall — the oldest building on campus — underwent a $2.6 million transformation and a baseball stadium was completed. (The next facility to receive renovation will be the Truman Wesley Collins Legal Center, where renovation and new construction will nearly double the size of the facility.) These improvements are part of a commitment to have an educational environment that is second to none among small liberal arts universities.

The word "education" is derived from the Latin "educare," which literally means "to bring out of" or "to lead forth." Willamette's educational mission affirms these meanings as we help students to develop intellectually, morally and socially and acquire life-long habits of learning. Within this context, I am pleased to present this record of 1988-89 — truly a year of works in progress!

Works in Progress

This Annual Report reviews and documents a year in the life of Willamette University, the year June 1, 1988, through May 31, 1989. But what happens here is a continuing process, part of the constant renewal which keeps life on a university campus vibrant. This was a year of building on the past and looking to the future. It was a year of works in progress.

The year was a prologue to our 1992 Sesquicentennial. The class which entered in the fall of 1988 will celebrate Willamette University's 150th anniversary with their commencement. A planning committee including current and emeriti faculty, students, administrators, classified staff and alumni developed a preliminary Sesquicentennial plan which was approved by the Board of Trustees. The goals are:

- To celebrate with fun, "hoopla" and meaning, involving all University constituencies.
- To enrich the intellectual and cultural life of the campus community.
- To enhance Willamette's national stature, emphasizing our tradition and quality as the West's oldest university.
- To advance development and fund-raising objectives.
- To use 1992 as a target for culminating major goals of the University Plan.

"Renewing the old historic temple" was a phrase often heard during the year, referring to the renovation of 122-year-old Waller Hall. Thanks to broad-based financial support for the Waller Hall campaign, this work in progress was nearing completion at year's end.

Talented Willamette students achieved national recognition in varied areas. Gregory Mulhauser '91 received a 1989 General Motors Liberal Arts Excellence Award. These awards recognized 10 of the nation's top liberal arts students, and provided a two-year scholarship to him and a grant to the University. Steve Morasch '89 was the second-place winner in the seventh annual Milton Friedman National Student Essay competition. His cash prize was presented by Dr. Friedman at a luncheon at Stanford University. Other student achievements are noted on page 9.

The freshman class was once again outstanding. National Merit Scholars numbered 17, more than any other college in the Northwest. Undergraduate students came from 17 states and nine foreign nations, with 11 percent minority students. College of Liberal Arts fall enrollment was 1514, with 155 in the Atkinson Graduate School of Management and 431 in the College of Law.

Off-campus study remains a strong component of the Willamette experience. A new program fall semester took 22 students with Richard (Buzz) Yocom to East Asia, where they traveled and studied at sister universities in China, Korea and Japan. Other semester study programs were in England and Spain. Spring post-sessions offered field studies in Australia, with biology Professor Donald Breakey; and a Russian language program in the U.S.S.R., led by Professor Magda Schay. The U.S.S.R. program was a reciprocal visit to Simferopol State University, which sent two people to Willamette spring semester. Such exchanges provide multicultural contacts for all Willamette students. A new development which may prove to have the greatest long-term impact on Willamette's diversity has its roots long ago (a quarter-century) and far away (Japan), but is just across the street: the Tokyo International University of America campus in Salem.

Other highlights of 1988-89 are mentioned in the President's opening message, in the messages which follow from the deans of our three colleges and in sections throughout this report.

Prudent stewardship of resources maintains Willamette's financial stability, as reflected in the fact that Willamette ended 1988-89 with a balanced operating budget for the twelfth consecutive year. The financial statements on pages 24-25 provide a thorough picture of changes during the year and the financial condition at year end. The Board of Trustees is responsible for this stewardship; its members are listed at the end of this Annual Report.

Donors, the people and organizations who support Willamette University, are listed in the Annual Gifts Report beginning on page 28. This report is dedicated to you, our donors, with deep appreciation. You are an integral part of Willamette University's works in progress.

FLEETINGLY,

College of Liberal Arts

To write about only a few selected activities from as dynamic a year as 1988-89 was for the College of Liberal Arts requires making some difficult choices. Over 1500 students, 104 full-time and 47 part-time faculty keep the campus lively and stimulating.

We welcomed three new faculty members on tenure-track appointments: Sharon Rose (Biology), Frank Zizza (Mathematics), and Douglas McGaughey (Religion); we also bade good luck and godspeed to two retiring faculty members: Dick Gillis (Economics) and Jerry Canning (Philosophy).

1988 marked the beginning of our new graduate degree program leading to a Master of Arts in Teaching (M.A.T.). With this new curriculum, the baccalaureate program in education coordinated with Western Oregon State College is being phased out—but students remaining in the program are finishing their degrees, nevertheless. In these first years of the M.A.T. program, students are preparing themselves for careers in secondary education; in 1991, we will add a curriculum in elementary education as well.

Two entirely new off-campus study programs began in 1988-89: one in Simferopol, Russia, and another as a study-tour of Korea, China, and Japan. The Consortium's program in Spain moved to a new location, Alicante. Students also participated in programs in Munich, London, Watford, and Ecuador. As our programs grew steadily in size and we continued to internationalize our curriculum and campus, we recognized the need to appoint a Director of International Education. Richard A. (Buzz) Yocom, who also serves as Registrar and Assistant to the President, assumed this new role in January.

Among Buzz's new responsibilities is oversight of one of the most exciting developments in Willamette's history: the creation of a sister campus of Tokyo International University (TIU) just across 12th Street. In May, their new building barely completed, 61 TIU students began studying English on their campus and ours, and in the summer, they began studying mathematics and statistics taught by Willamette faculty. This fall, they'll take courses in several departments—but I'll tell you more about that in next year's report. We expect the program to double in size in 1990.

To prepare for these new students and the impact of TIUA on our campus, CLA faculty members held a workshop on Intercultural Communication in May. This Workshop was one of three held to enrich faculty effectiveness. The other two were on using computers in the classroom and for research, and on teaching writing and leading class discussions.

As the faculty headed off-campus to do research and renew their teaching skills this summer, some had some very special help. During the spring semester, as the result of a grant from the Hewlett Fund, the University's endowed presidential discretionary fund, we established a unique program of Undergraduate Research Grants. The purpose of the program is to support and encourage undergraduate students to participate in research and other creative and professional activities. Fourteen students won grants totalling $20,000 for projects as varied and interesting as studying genetic variability among plant populations, writing a screen adaptation of an Egyptian autobiography, participating in an archaeological excavation in Tell Nim Rin, Jordan, and investigating the development of a learning theory in artificial intelligence.

The faculty, of course, weren't the only ones heading off campus in late spring. 341 seniors graduated, 51 with honors. Kimberly Weeden, with a grade point average of 3.968, received highest honors, the designation of graduating "Summa Cum Laude." Kimberly plans to begin graduate work, probably in sociology, a year from now. She double-majored in psychology and sociology. The three most popular majors of graduating seniors were political science, English and business economics.

All this. And it's only part of the story. There were honors and awards, new courses, extensive travel, and so many visiting scholars, artists, lecturers, and musicians that the faculty and students were busy all the time. It was a good year for them, and for me, as their new dean. I look forward to writing you many of these annual reports.

College of Law

The rich history and tradition of the College of Law gives us the ability to welcome change—and we have made extensive changes in the past year.

Nothing small seems to be happening at the College of Law. After 18 months of intense planning, the law school has prepared a plan to enlarge the law library and add classroom and student areas to our facility. Our plan has been approved by the Board of Trustees and through a generous donation by The Collins Foundation, we have begun the fund-raising process.

Four new faculty members have been appointed. Professor Dale Rubin, who earned his law degree from the University of California-Berkeley, will bring over 15 years of law practice to his courses in the commercial law area. Professor Susan Smith, a Harvard Law School graduate and a supervising attorney in the United States Department of Justice, will center her teaching in the Environmental Law and Natural Resources Law areas. Professor Maureen Callahan joins the faculty from a major law firm in Seattle. Professor Callahan is a University of Chicago law graduate who will concentrate her efforts in Administrative Law and State and Local Government Law. Visiting Professor Eric Holmes is a tenured member of the faculty of the University of Georgia School of Law. Professor Holmes, a law graduate of both the University of North Carolina and Columbia University, is a nationally known expert on insurance law and teaches in the commercial law area.

The faculty adopted a new curriculum which will be phased in over the next year. The new curriculum will give every first year student the opportunity to study one subject each semester in a class of 30. Associated with each small section is a section of Legal Research and Writing. Beginning in 1990-91, every third-year student will enroll in a seminar with 20 or fewer students. In the seminar, the student will fulfill the legal writing requirement for graduation.

Faculty scholarly productivity hit new highs during 1988-89. In addition to numerous law review articles, two faculty members—Professors Hagedorn and Vollmar—have recently contracted to publish new books. These new books come on the heels of three new faculty books during 1988.

The enrollment picture at the College of Law remains very bright. Over the last two years, applications for admission to the College of Law have increased by 42 percent. Although applications to law schools have increased nationally over the last two years, Willamette University has exceeded the national average. A new direction in curriculum, appointment of new faculty and the leadership of Admissions Director Larry Seno, have all contributed to the success. Students from 22 states and 83 undergraduate institutions were represented in the first year class.

Willamette University Center for Dispute Resolution is now five years old. The Center's three-fold mission is teaching, research and public service. In May 1989, the College of Law presented Certificates in Dispute Resolution to 34 law students, our largest group to date. The Center, under the new leadership of Professor Ross Runkel, provides continuing legal education seminars as well as hands-on arbitration and mediation services. Ex-director Bryan Johnston, now associate dean for administration, remains active in the Center's activities.

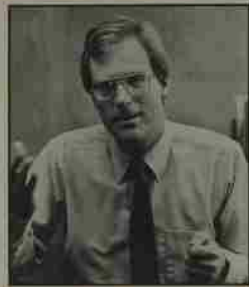

Visiting scholars always bring new perspectives which invigorate our daily routines. This past year, the College of Law's interesting visitors included Chen An, Dean of the Law School of Xiamen University; Professor Hu Wen-Shi of Shanghai; Professor Halina Niec from Cracow; and Professor Andrew Stewart of the Law Faculty of the University of Sydney, who taught Contracts during the Spring Semester. Ralph Abernathy, long-time president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, was the featured speaker at the College of Law's annual Martin Luther King Dinner.

I am proud of our progress over the last year. Every good institution is always a "Work in Progress." The secret to success, I believe, is to weld the needed changes onto a strong, traditional structure. I believe we continue to be successful in the way we change.

Message from the Dean

Atkinson Graduate School of Management

By any measure, the academic year of 1988-89 was one of the most successful in the Atkinson School's history. Across the spectrum, it was a year of outstanding performances. From national recognition for faculty and students to record-setting enrollment, it is worth identifying some highlights of the year:

The school enrolled the largest entering class in its history, as 70 full-time and 20 part-time students began the march toward their master of management. The class included larger proportions of international and women students than in recent years; its average age of 26 was two years lower than the previous class.

Professor Steve Maser was selected as one of four national finalists for the Instructional Innovation Award Competition sponsored by the Decision Sciences Institute. Steve will present his work in New Orleans in November and find out whether he is the national winner. It is worth noting that this recognition comes on the heels of his winning the $4,000 Lon Fuller Prize in Jurisprudence in 1988.

Professor Patrick Connor began a joint research project with Professor Takeshi Kakuyama of Tokyo International University. Their work, supported as a part of a grant to Willamette from the Fred Meyer Charitable Trust, will focus on value systems and personalities of Japanese managers and their impact on careers.

Professor Mike Hand was awarded a $25,000 grant from the Oregon Advanced Computing Institute (OACIS) to begin work on a parallel computing environment for large-scale economic models. Parallel processing has the potential to reduce hardware costs dramatically once the right applications software is developed. Mike's ability to combine programming skills with statistics expertise puts him at the forefront of this research.

We added Dr. Kathleen Powers to the faculty as Assistant Professor of Human Resource Management. She holds a doctorate from the University of Florida and comes to Oregon from Texas Tech University; her research has focused on the links between employee job satisfaction and unionization.

Two members of the Class of 1989, Randy Chakerian and Dan McGrane, were included in Top Ten Business Students in Oregon, Oregon Business Maga- zine. This is the second time the magazine has chosen its top ten and the second time the Atkinson School has been the only master's program with two students on the list.

The Atkinson School also had two Presidential Management Interns this year, Dan McGrane and Craig Harmer. They are our eleventh and twelfth "PMIs" since this prestigious program began in 1979.

The Sixth Annual Conference on Entrepreneurship was held in April and attracted more than 400 participants to hear speakers such as Debbi Fields of Mrs. Fields Cookies and to see Oran Robertson, retired chair of Fred Meyer, Inc., receive the Glenn Jackson Leadership Award.

The Alumni Association's 1988-89 theme was Involvement, and more than one-third of our alums participated in School activities such as the Professional Development Seminar, the Alumni Phonathon, Industry Leader Forums, Interviewing Seminars, Management Strategies Luncheons (Portland), Update Luncheons (Salem), the Alumni-Faculty Dinner, the Brown Water Regatta, the Conference on Entrepreneurship, and Alumni Receptions (Seattle, Portland, Salem, San Francisco, and Los Angeles).

Alumni, friends and faculty of the School set a new record for annual giving of $19,545, just shy of our $20,000 goal. Alumni Annual Fund participation was 34 percent, highest among Willamette's three schools. We have more than doubled our annual giving total over the past three years.

This is an impressive list of activities, but it would not be complete without noting the planning that began for a thorough evaluation of the School's core (first year) curriculum. Not content to rest on our laurels, and supported by the University's William and Flora Hewlett Foundation fund for faculty development, we have scheduled visits from six distinguished management experts including Dean Robert Jaedicke of the Stanford Graduate School of Business and Lyman Porter, co-author of Management Education and Development. This effort will help us to prepare our students for the management challenges of the future so we can continue to enhance our reputation for quality education.

Sabbatical: A Time for Renewal

A sabbatical leave provides a time to renew, to rekindle enthusiasm, to research, to travel, to write, to develop new teaching materials.

Willamette University's sabbatical leave policy encourages professional growth and intellectual enrichment, especially as they contribute to teaching effectiveness. The range of activities is as diverse as faculty themselves. Serendipity seems to be one of the few constants—most faculty discover that unplanned opportunities lead to some of their most valued experiences.

Historically, the term sabbatical implied a year of rest for the land, observed every seventh year in ancient Judea. Land was allowed to lie fallow, then plants were turned under to provide nutrients to rejuvenate the soil, creating a more fertile environment for future growth.

"I think the experiences, concepts and endeavors explored during faculty sabbaticals function in much the same way, allowing us to pursue avenues of investigation that are not possible in a regular academic year," comments Susan Kephart, one of 15 faculty who were granted sabbatical leaves for 1988-89.

"For example, a highlight of my sabbatical was an impromptu tour of the southwestern deserts of the United States during portions of March and April," notes Kephart, who is associate professor of biology. "Such a trip has never been possible before because my teaching schedule precluded visiting the desert during its season of growth and flowering... Photographic slides and my experiences on that trip will add a new dimension of credibility and interest to courses relating to plant ecology and systematics..."

The intended purpose of her sabbatical was to learn and apply the biochemical technique of protein electrophoresis to the study of plant diversity and evolution. She spent fall semester in the laboratory at the University of Washington. In the spring, she adapted biochemical techniques for use in teaching and research at Willamette.

Susan Kephart (right) demonstrates the electrophoresis apparatus which she set up at Willamette during her sabbatical. It is for use by faculty and students conducting biochemical studies. Kephart is pointing to a gel, on which the dark bands represent proteins of different individuals, migrating in an electrical field. Darcie Flanagan (left) is a student who worked on research with her afterward. Flanagan's research was one of 14 projects funded by the new Undergraduate Research Grants program at Willamette.

Lane McGaughy, Geo. H. Atkinson Professor of Religious and Ethical Studies, conducted research at Yale Divinity School, did extensive writing and editing, and traveled.

"The finale to the sabbatical year was in many ways its high point: a trip to the Middle East, Greece and Crete," he recalls. "While in Israel, Professor Dick Rohrbaugh, an archaeologist and New Testament specialist...spent two weeks showing me the major historic sites...Quite unexpectedly, we also joined a tour of Gaza City and the Jubalya refugee camp in the occupied Gaza Strip in order to see conditions there firsthand."

Also visiting parts of the world which have been much in the news was Catherine Collins, associate professor of speech.

"While I was in China, a rebellion occurred in Tibet. I collected media coverage in China for the event and will write an analysis comparing their coverage and Western coverage of the rebellion," she explains. "Since they blame the prolonged violence on Western media, it should prove an interesting project. The student demonstrations immediately following my return to the U.S. will be the subject of one paper I am submitting to the International Communication Association conference in Dublin next June.

"...I think it is increasingly important to develop intercultural awareness. This trip helped me better understand the relationship between a culture and an authoritarian press. It also enabled me to bring back slides and other materials which will broaden the intercultural materials in the media criticism classes and in the political communication class..."

Collins also attended workshops on teaching ethics and about the Vietnam War. She intended to research and write about political advertising. While she did collect and research presidential paid political announcements, the writing remains a work in progress.

Valerie J. Vollmar, associate professor of law, spent her spring term sabbatical writing while in residence at Willamette's College of Law. She intended to do research and to write a law review article on the use of discretionary trusts in estate planning for disabled family members. But an opportunity arose for her to co-author a casebook on trusts and estates.

"I found the process of writing a book to be a thoroughly fascinating and enjoyable experience," she comments. "I also learned to fly during my sabbatical!"

Other faculty who took sabbaticals in 1988-89 were:

Robert Art, Law

For research and writing on the Revised Model Business Corporation Act

Ludwig Fischer, German

For a book on the use of the oral tradition in language and literature teaching

Carol Ireson, Sociology

For research and writing a book on Rural Women in Liberated Laos

Anita King, Music

For piano performance, learning new repertoire and studying art history and literature

Susan Leeson, Political Science

To complete a co-authored constitutional law casebook and pursue a reading program in American legal history

Robert Lucas, History

For research in contemporary interpretations of the origins of the Hundred Years War and commentaries on Greek and Latin classics commissioned by King Charles V of France

Junpei Sekino, Mathematics

For research and writing in numerical analysis and computer graphics

Ted Shay, Political Science

To explore the political, governmental and legal circumstances underlying the Rajneeshee experiment in Oregon

Carlton Snow, Law

For writing, research and preparation of course materials

Thomas Talbott, Philosophy

To complete a book dealing with the philosophy of religion

Michael Wise, Law

To undertake research and writing about the legal institutions of Central America and to develop his ability to read and write Spanish

The intellectual stimulation, rejuvenation and break from routines provided by sabbatical leaves make them an integral ingredient in the quality of works in progress at Willamette University.

Financial Report

Willamette University's solid financial position provides a firm foundation for academic excellence. Thanks to the generosity of alumni and other donors and to the prudent stewardship of resources and fiscal conservatism in undertaking construction projects, Willamette has maintained a balanced budget for 12 consecutive years.

Financial condition, too, is a work in progress. We cannot rest on our laurels, but must continue to be vigilant and prudent, to plan carefully and to provide support to keep Willamette's financial foundation sufficient to meet the challenges ahead.

Willamette's Cornerstone

You've probably heard the story about an observer at a construction site:

The observer asked some workers what they were doing. One said, "I'm installing electrical wires." Another replied, "I'm putting in sheet rock." The observer turned to another worker and commented, "And you must be mixing cement." "No," came the response, "I am building a cathedral!"

Willamette University is engaged in building cathedrals. While the faculty, administration and staff may periodically feel they're mixing cement, their "works in progress" are valuable contributions to our society.

The cornerstone of cathedral-building is financial support for scholarships, endowment, physical plant improvements and other important purposes. During the past year, Willamette's alumni and friends once again generously provided the monetary tools that the University needed for its "works in progress."

This Annual Gifts Report recognizes those who contributed $5.6 million in gifts and grants during 1988-89. On behalf of Willamette and its Board of Trustees, I want to thank all donors for their generous support of the University's mission.

This year, I particularly want to recognize and thank a dear friend and colleague — former Vice President for University Relations Jerry Whipple — for his special role in serving Willamette by raising support for its academic endeavors. Unfortunately, Jerry suffered a stroke in February and has not been able to return to the University. I have asked Jerry to share a few words with you about two development highlights — alumni participation in last year's Annual Funds and support for the Waller Hall renovation project.

Thank you again for your wise investment in a very noble and important enterprise!

Sincerely,

Warne H. Nunn '41
Chairman, Trustee Development Committee

The Privilege of Supporting Willamette

My career at Willamette began in 1955. The essence of the University has not changed since then — the heart of the institution is still a dedicated faculty committed to outstanding students and quality teaching.

I have been privileged to serve at Willamette because of its continued commitment to educational excellence. The University's progress has depended, since its founding, on the loyalty and generosity of alumni and friends. Willamette has a fine reputation today and continues to grow stronger because of the base of financial resources made possible by your gifts.

I am particularly pleased, therefore, to report that alumni participation in the Annual Funds — the vital foundation of the University's financial support — surpassed 30%. While this is still far short of the mark I think appropriate, this represents significant progress.

I am pleased, too, that alumni support for the renovation of the old historic temple was sufficient to meet the $400,000 Waller Hall Challenge and to ensure the $2.6 million project is fully funded. Thanks to you, Willamette's great mission continues with a tie to its pioneer past and distinguished heritage.

Time has a way of enhancing one's appreciation for educational quality. While two of our children were Willamette students, my wife and I knew they were receiving fine academic training. Since their graduation, we feel an even greater sense of value for their collegiate experience.

Gifts are a tangible way to express gratitude to Willamette. They are also important to ensure ongoing quality in the University's academic programs.

I have found no finer investment than one in the life of Willamette. I have been privileged to be associated with the institution and to seek the enhancement of its educational mission. Without qualification, I encourage you to join me in supporting the University's faculty and students by developing or maintaining a habit of giving to Willamette.

Very truly yours,

E. Jerry Whipple

The Jason Lee Society

The Jason Lee Society is the highest of Willamette's contributing organizations. Named for the principal founder of Willamette University, this organization honors individuals who contributed $1,000 or more to the University during the last fiscal year. Gustavus Hines, an early trustee tells of the sacrifices that saw "many of the people cheerfully giving from one-quarter to one-third of all they possessed in the world" that the Oregon Institute, Willamette's forerunner, might be established in 1842. Lee himself made the ultimate sacrifice, dying while traveling in search of financial support. His entire estate was left to the school, and his gift continues to affect the lives of young people attending his beloved school almost 150 years later. This contributing organization honors donors who believe in education and who are committed to supporting their beliefs with major financial gifts. Their gifts reflect the generous sacrifices and commitment of the early pioneers as exemplified by Jason Lee.

The Waller Society

The Waller Society is named for Alvan F. Waller, who carried on the tradition of service and devotion begun by Jason Lee. This society honors those individuals who contributed $500 to $999 to Willamette. It was Alvan Waller, as a trustee, who bore the responsibility for developing the financial well-being of Willamette as the University grew. It was he who found the funds and supervised the construction of what is now known as Waller Hall, completed in 1867 and the physical cornerstone upon which the University has grown over the years. The Waller Society, like the Waller name in Willamette's history, represents a solid commitment to the financial support of the University and a building block upon which the future of the University can be secured.

The Step Society

The Step Society commemorates the historic old step at Waller Hall, worn by the feet of so many people over time. This organization honors those individuals who contributed $250 to $499 to Willamette during the last fiscal year. Contributors to the Step Society provide vital support for the academic footing needed by new generations of students who cross Willamette's threshold and step into their professional careers.

The Century Club

The Century Club honors those individuals who contributed $100 to $249 to Willamette during the last fiscal year. It is the club in which a tradition of annual giving to the University is built and from which the other contributing organizations flow. As the backbone of donor support for the University, the Century Club represents a most valuable base upon which the future of Willamette will be built.

No one has given more often . . . or gives more frequently! An alumnus who prefers to remain anonymous is in the habit of giving to the Alumni Annual Fund. In fact, he's been writing out monthly checks of $50 to Willamette for over 12 years. Budgeting Annual Fund contributions for your alma mater: a great way to support Willamette, its important mission and its deserving students!

The Collins Foundation renewed a challenge to Willamette alumni in 1988-89: If you haven't given lately to the University, give now, and if you have been giving, give more. In turn, the Foundation promised to contribute dollars for new alumni donors, for increases in gift size, and for an increase in the percentage of alumni who give to the Annual Fund.

Alumni responded with spirit. More than 4,600 joined their fellow alumni as contributors, gift size increased, and Annual Fund participation jumped to more than 30 percent of all alumni. Altogether, the gains merited a $16,430 gift from the Foundation challengers.

The Alumni Annual Fund is just one aspect of The Collins Foundation's support for Willamette, which is broad and deep. The Foundation, among the largest in Oregon, also is a leading supporter of Willamette's prestigious G. Herbert Smith Scholarship Program which makes major awards annually to some of the University's most gifted students. In the College of Law in recent years, the Foundation has been a principal force in establishing the endowed Thomas B. Stoel Chair and has made a leadership pledge for the upcoming renovation of the Truman Wesley Collins Legal Center building.

In 1988, the Fred Meyer Charitable Trust made a $295,000 grant to Willamette for strengthening the University's international education programs. Included was a $25,000 challenge for purchasing and installing a new $75,000 language laboratory.

Willamette met the Trust's challenge during 1988-89. This was made possible by generous grants from the Burlington Northern Foundation, the Jackson Foundation, Montgomery Street Foundation, and the English Language Service.

The new language laboratory is in Walton Hall.

Willamette's John Lewis Field has long been recognized as one of the best baseball diamonds in Oregon. Now, a grandstand stadium, locker and rest rooms, and a press box that are commensurate with the quality of the playing field have been added.

The Roy S. "Spec" Keene Stadium is named for a long-time Willamette coach whose contributions to excellence in Oregon athletics are still in evidence. The 1,200-seat stadium was dedicated on May 13.

The improvements were made possible by Willamette Athletic Director Bill Trenbeath, former Bearcat baseball coach (1974-86), who contributed countless hours to construction of, and raising support for, the $500,000 project. Major contributors to the project included: A.J. Frank Family Foundation, the Autzen Foundation, Boatwright Engineering, Cardinal Round Table, Cherry City Electric, City of Salem, Ford Hill Lumber Company, Hitchman Foundation, Hoffman Construction Co., Al Loucks, Ross Brothers Construction, Stark Trucking, Phil Settecase, Glenn Stevens, Bill Trenbeath, Walling Sand & Gravel, and the William S. Walton Charitable Trust.

The Portland-based Chiles Foundation, one of the largest in Oregon, has during this decade given Willamette $412,000 for scholarships, a significant part of the University's financial aid program. Scholarships go each year to undergraduate and graduate students with outstanding academic records and demonstrated financial need.

Among the 25 Willamette students who shared $70,000 in Chiles Scholarships in 1988-89:

- A senior math and sociology major who maintained a 3.8 grade point average while participating in band, choir, residence hall government and University governance.
- A senior biology major with a 3.5 g.p.a. and a record of active involvement in the Collegian, Walluluh, the campus radio station, and residence hall government.
- A third-year law student who coached city-league youth basketball, taught in the community-service People's Law School, competed in Moot Court, and had leading roles in both student-body and College of Law governance.

The Chiles Foundation contributes to special projects at the University as well, such as a recent grant for basketball equipment and uniforms. Chiles Foundation also has figured prominently in an oral history project associated with the Hatfield Archives at the University's Mark O. Hatfield Library.
