Distinguished Artists' Series announces events

Four topflight performances will again be offered during Willamette's Distinguished Artists' Series this coming year.

Marina Mdivani, widely regarded as the Soviet Union's outstanding woman pianist, opens the series October 29, followed by Kleidoscope Players, a drama company that will perform Dylan Thomas "Under Milk Wood," November 19.

The 22-voice, world famous Vienna Choir Boys will present a program of sacred music, folk songs and costume operettas on January 28, while the Paul Winter jazz sextet, the first jazz ensemble to perform at the White House, will close the series March 15.

Tickets for the series will be on sale after September 1 at Stevens and Son Jewelers and Meier and Frank Company in Salem.

Receives medal for heroism

Gorman D. Colling, '59, a traffic staff supervisor for Pacific Northwest Bell, recently received a Silver Vail Medal and $1,000 check, one of the highest awards given by the Bell system to an employee for an act of heroism.

Colling rescued five-year-old Albert Kent of Woodburn from a car submerged in the Wilson River, 20 miles east of Tillamook, last August. Colling was driving along the highway when he spotted the car under water about 15 feet from shore.

He scrambled down a 50-foot bank and dove into the swift water, swimming with the current to the sunken auto. He forced the car door open and pulled the unconscious boy from the car. After swimming to shore with the child, he returned to the car in a vain attempt to rescue the boy's grandmother, Mrs. Ina Kent, Woodburn, who drowned in the car. A bystander applied mouth-to-mouth resuscitation to revive the Kent lad.

Colling received his Bachelor of Arts in economics. He is married and the father of three children. The Collings reside in Yakima, Washington.

Campus active with summer programs

While carpenters, painters and handy-men are busy on the Willamette campus in the summer refurbishing of the physical plant, the academic atmosphere has still been maintained with the presence of over 1000 "students" of varying degrees for special summer programs.

In addition to the regular summer session with 80 students earning up to seven hours of credit and a post-session of two weeks for two credit hours, the University has hosted JESSI and CASSI institutes, the Oregon Annual Conference of the Methodist church, Girls State, the Coe Institute of American Studies, a Japanese exchange program and an Oregon high school teachers' workshop.

JESSI—Junior Engineers and Scientists Summer Institute—provided two weeks of extensive study for 62 high school girls in science and related fields with the purpose of helping them make college major or career decisions. At the same time, CASSI—Communication Arts and Science Summer Institute—afforded 93 high school boys and girls from seven states a look at the social sciences and arts, and provided background for future career decisions.

Regular University professors instructed the JESSI and CASSI students, and on the whole, felt that the students were bright and that they gained a great deal from the program sponsored by Scientists of Tomorrow, a national, non-profit organization.

Early in the summer, nearly 300 ministers and lay delegates of the Methodist Church convened on campus for their 113th annual, week-long session. The coming year's program was outlined, new appointments were made and various committees were organized.

About 270 high school girls spent a week studying citizenship and government during Girls' State. It was the 18th straight session hosted by the University.

The six-week Coe Institute attracted 28 secondary teachers in social studies for additional study in history, political science and economics. The teachers received fellowships for the program from the Coe Foundation of New York. Willamette, one of several universities selected for the program, sponsored its third session this summer.

Forty students from various Japanese colleges and universities participated in the first two-week summer seminar in American studies, a program that is anticipated to be conducted on an annual exchange basis in the future.

About 100 Oregon high school teachers and leaders were on campus for a two-week workshop in teaching methods and materials for the continued improvement of secondary education.

Despite the academic activity, workmen have been able to re-roof Baxter Hall and install new windows on the Southern exposure; re-model the conference room in Eaton Hall into an office for dean-elect Doenges; re-finish all wood floors in Lee, York, Matthews, Belknap, Kappa Sigma and Delta Tau Delta; re-model parts of the College of Music and supply new furniture for the recital hall; install a new heating system in the Law School; soundproof two music rooms in the Fine Arts building; and paint many of the offices and rooms on campus.

College of Music wins national award

Willamette University's College of Music is one of six colleges nationally to receive an award of merit and $500 prize from the National Federation of Music Clubs and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP).

Announcement of the award was received this week by Dean Charles Bestor of the College of Music, who called the award "the single most important award given to promote new American music."

Selection of Willamette was based primarily on the first annual Festival of Contemporary Arts held this past April in which the University sponsored a nationwide music composition contest.

In addition to Willamette, the judges named Bowdoin College (Maine); Elmira College (New York); the University of Cincinnati College Conservatory of Music; University of Illinois and the University of Washington. Honorable mention winners were Arizona State University; University of Iowa and Converse College (South Carolina).

Dean Bestor indicated that the prize money will in turn be used for prizes in next year's Festival of Contemporary Arts at Willamette April 11-15. The University will then sponsor national contests not only in original music, but drama, poetry and fiction as well.

The award of merit will be presented to Willamette by an officer of the National Federation of Music Clubs in September.

Air Force ROTC to accept students from neighboring colleges

For the first time since Air Force ROTC training at Willamette became non-compulsory in 1961, a major change in the program has taken place under the 1964 ROTC Revitalization Act.

Cadets seeking a commission in the Air Force will have to qualify under the same physical and mental requirements as before, but the program has been cut from four years to two and instead of a month-long summer camp before the final year, a student starts the program with a six-week summer indoctrination.

During the summer indoctrination, the student will be exposed to leadership laboratory (drill) and 40 hours of academics. If, after the indoctrination, the student shows possibilities of becoming a good officer and if he wishes to continue in the program, he signs up for Aerospace Studies 300, the start of a two-year course.

Pay of $40 a month starts at the beginning of the two-year course, and the cadet must successfully complete 12 hours of academic credit in AFROTC courses. Drill on campus has been done away with entirely, although uniforms will still be issued.

Another innovation is the addition of students from Linfield and Oregon College of Education who wish to obtain AFROTC training. They must attend courses at Willamette, but credit will be administered through their respective schools.

According to Major Howard Hundemer, professor of Air Science, over 20 cadets are expected to start under the new program in the fall. He stated that "I feel that this program is going to be the best type of training program for Willamette for three reasons: (1) the elimination of drill removes a time drain from the academic load, (2) the revised curriculum will be more effective for the type of leadership the Air Force desires and (3) the changed format and pay increase will be better accepted by the students."

Grants received from foundations

Money grants totaling $44,000 have been received by Willamette this summer, one of them a conditional grant of $25,000 from the Kresge Foundation of Detroit to be used toward the construction of the Truman Collins Legal Center.

Dr. Arthur Payton, associate professor of chemistry, has received $12,000 in two separate grants, a three-year $10,000 research stipend from the Petroleum Research Fund of the American Chemical Society and a $2,000 grant from the Research Corporation of New York, a foundation for the advancement of science. Dr. Payton is conducting research on non-isothermal galvanic cells for the eventual prediction of properties of electrolytic solutions.

A $7,000 institutional grant from the National Science Foundation will be divided and administered by the science departments for equipment and research. This is the second year Willamette has received such a grant from the NSF, with last year's totaling $11,000.

Willamette must match the Kresge grant by July 1, 1967, in order to satisfy the condition set by the Foundation.

In addition to these cash grants, visual aid equipment and materials valued at $2000 were received by the Education Department from the 3-M Company of Minneapolis. Included were two overhead projectors, one portable and one for classroom use.

Caylor succeeds father as columnist

Tom Caylor, '60, started in July as a new editorial columnist for the San Francisco News-Call-Bulletin, replacing his father Arthur Caylor who died a few weeks ago after serving as a columnist for the paper for 34 years.

In announcing Caylor's position, the editor stated: "While only 27, Tom Caylor is an experienced writer, editor and economist. He is a graduate of Willamette University, majoring in economics and philosophy. He also studied at the Sorbonne while living in Paris, and traveled extensively throughout Europe."

Caylor's columns will run daily on the Section Page in the News-Call-Bulletin. He wrote columns for the paper during his father's illness.

Recent graduate appointed to development staff

Edward H. Cole, student body president at Willamette this past year, was appointed assistant in development at the University this summer by President Smith with the specific assignment of seeking additional funds for scholarships and financial aid to Willamette students.

At present, Willamette is giving students about $250,000 each year in financial assistance, but development plans over the next eight years call for an increase to $450,000.

In addition to many student body posts, Cole is a member of Omicron Delta Kappa leadership honor society, Pi Gamma Mu social science honorary and Delta Tau Delta fraternity. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree in political science.

College students from Japan study at Willamette

Summer visitors mix hard work with avid sight-seeing

A "sister" has been added to the Willamette Family, as President G. Herbert Smith announced a sister college relationship with the International College of Commerce and Economics of Kawagoe, Japan, following a highly successful two-week seminar in American studies for 35 Japanese college students on the Willamette campus.

The agreement was formalized by Dr. Smith and President Taizo Kaneko of the expanding ICC, a college of 200 students located near Tokyo that has designs of reaching 1,000 students within four years.

In announcing the sister college agreement, Dr. Smith stated that "we have a high regard and admiration for the International College of Commerce and Dr. Kaneko, and we're delighted to be entering into this relationship."

ICC will send another group of students to Willamette again next summer for a similar program in American history and English studies, while Dr. Smith expressed hope that sometime in the future Willamette will be able to send some of its students to Japan on a similar basis.

In addition, it is anticipated that there will eventually be a faculty exchange between the two institutions and there will be a continuous exchange of ideas and materials that may prove beneficial to both universities.

Over half of the students in the program this summer were from ICC, while the others represented the Society for Interchange of College Students and ten different universities in Japan. They all attended classes in American history, and English conversation, composition and literature instructed by Dr. Harue Koike, Dr. Warren Brown, Dr. Richard Lord and Margaret Ringnalda of the Willamette staff. Chaplain Merlin McGladrey of the Willamette faculty acted as coordinator of the seminar program.

Many of the students had up to eight years of English study, but the British pronunciation has been emphasized in their instruction and the students noticed the difference in certain cases with American pronunciation. Dr. Koike, a native of Tokyo, singled out the distinction between the l's and r's and the pronunciation of the "th" sound as particularly troublesome for the students in speaking, "although they did very well," she said.

She was also pleased over their interest and ability to comprehend American literature. "I found their critical opinions especially perceptive and most of them displayed the ability to think deeply in the material."

All of the professors found them hesitant at first to test their English, but with increasing confidence they opened up, expressing their views and trying to understand ours.

Dr. Brown gave them a brief view of the American heritage, political system and foreign policy in his course on American history, and he found their response particularly interesting. "They found it hard to understand the civil rights controversy, wondering 'why do Christians have this feeling about other human beings?'"

They were also critical of our involvement in Vietnam, though they recognize our responsibility to contain Communism. Some of them felt that we are doing it in the wrong place—within China's traditional and natural sphere.

They also expressed the feeling that we are too concerned and too fearful of Communism. They themselves feel no threat either from China or Russia. And while they realize the American bases and troops in Japan are for their defense, they feel they can stand on their own feet and would like to see the bases and troops withdrawn, relying on "the bomb" for defense rather than the armed forces.

In addition to their classroom studies each day, the visiting students experienced a whirlwind of activities that included visits with Gov. Mark Hatfield, attorney general Robert Thornton (who spoke to them in Japanese) and with families in Salem. They spent a day at the coast, a half day at Thetford Lodge on the Santiam River, toured the Capitol, attended a Pentacle Theater production, visited a dairy and farm, met with American students and played a baseball game, and numerous other activities to give them a brief view of American life during their stay.

Upon conclusion of the program, they were all presented with certificates from the University. In addition, Yukinao (Yuki) Mizuta, a Willamette student the past two years, received his Bachelor of Arts degree in economics in a special commencement ceremony for the occasion. Yuki was instrumental in bringing the Japanese exchange to the University.

Speeches by Japanese visitors at the Awards Banquet closing the first Seminar in American Studies for Japanese Students at Willamette University

Dr. Taizo Kaneko, President of the International College of Commerce and Economics

On behalf of the International College of Commerce and Economics, Tokyo, I thank you all here present and those who are connected directly or indirectly with Willamette University for your kind cooperation and assistance to make our stay instructive and pleasant.

I wish to express my hearty thanks toward all distinguished people here in Salem, including Mr. Hatfield, Governor of Oregon, and all the other nice people who were kind enough to cooperate with the University and made our schedule not only successful but enjoyable. I wish especially to say some words of thanks to those families who took our students for the stay overnight, because it was indeed a wonderful experience for us all.

Our stay here has been only for two weeks. This may be too short for us to be able to command the mastery of the English language which is, it is true, one of the chief objectives of our coming here, but sharing meals on the campus, going on a picnic, attending church services, staying overnight with American families, all these were most conducive to learning the American way of life and the American way of thinking.

Now we have a little knowledge of real American life. We have come to know not through books or second-hand information but directly from our personal contact something about what is America, and how people in America think.

Knowing each other through direct personal contact is the basis of mutual understanding. And mutual understanding is the cause of common feeling and sentiment. If we understand each other we feel like you Americans feel. Why? It is because both Americans and Japanese belong to the humankind. It is true there exists great difference between East and West. The manners, customs, ways we Japanese live may be quite different from yours. Whenever I fly from Japan to the United States, I am always surprised at its great difference. Yet this great difference is almost meaningless when compared to what we, Americans and Japanese, have in common, I mean humanity.

Beyond many differences and difficulties, including the language barrier, there always springs up common humanistic feeling, which grows into friendship. I mean when we come to have the same view on something, we are most likely to be friends. It is my great joy to learn that we, Willamette University and International College, are now sister schools. This is indeed an outcome of friendship which has been so lately started and so firmly fostered. In a sense, this is indeed a miracle of friendship, as President Smith has said.

I feel doubly happy that this miracle has taken place in the field of education because education is the only activity in social fields that contributes to moulding future society. Future generations will be better or worse according as they receive good or bad education. We owe everything to our forefathers, to our predecessors, in a word, to the past. Every technological development we owe our past scientists. Every privilege, political, social and economic privilege we enjoy now is the asset we owe our statesmen, thinkers, scholars, and businessmen of the past as well as of the present. But so far as education is concerned, we are not debtors to the past, but to the future generations. It is our duty and responsibility to give everything we have to the coming youth. If we fail to give what we owe them, they are doomed to face miserable situations. In this sense education is indeed a debt due from the present to future generations.

In conclusion I take this opportunity to express my hearty thanks to all we know as well as my firm resolution to work steadily for strengthening the friendly bond between our two universities which I hope will ultimately contribute to better understanding between our two peoples.

Thank you again for every assistance and help you were so kind to extend to us all, and so for your attention to my talk. Thank you.

*Professor Futaba Suzuki, Director,
The Society for Interchange of College Students*

I bring you greetings from our President, Doctor Gyoju O Date of the Society for Interchange of College Students, of which I am a Director.

I am in charge of eleven young ladies and six young men from colleges in various parts of Japan. These students are sponsored by our Society, in cooperation with Doctor Taizo Kaneko, who is in charge of a group of young ladies and young men from his University of Commerce and Economics in Japan.

In behalf of our Society and our students, I wish to thank you very much for your warm hospitality of Willamette University and the people of Salem.

We wish to thank the faculty who have worked hard to help our students in their understanding of English and American History and customs. We have all learned very much.

We all go home to Japan with more love for the United States and we believe our visit will help in better international relations.

We hope that these visits can be continued next year. If any of our students have made mistakes, we are very sorry and wish you to please excuse.

We wish that many of you will come to visit us in Japan.

*Miss Hiroko Yamamoto, Student,
Aoyama Gakuin University*

We are very grateful to you all, President Smith who gave us such a wonderful opportunity, Professors who gave up vacations and taught us, and many families which kindly invited us.

Willamette University has a very beautiful campus, which is two times as large as my university, Aoyama Gakuin. Doney Hall, Eaton Hall, library, dining room and green grass, I like these things very much. I'll never forget this beautiful campus.

Professors had spoken English very carefully. We thank them for their kind consideration for us. Though it cannot be helped, I am very sorry that we had not so many chance to associate with American students. If possible, I'd like to study with them.

I can hardly say that I could understand subjects very well, but I learned something deeper, more important, spiritual

DR. G. HERBERT SMITH

President's annual report marks historic year for Willamette

"The college year 1964-65 may well go down in the history of Willamette University as a 'year of decision,'" according to President Smith in his report to the June meeting of the Board of Trustees.

Quoting further from the report: "The many decisions reached are sure to influence the history of the University for the next quarter century and will set the pattern for the educational program of Willamette for the immediate future. These decisions have been made in every area of university life and activity. One of the most far-reaching ones, however, was made by the City Council of the City of Salem completely outside of any power of the University. This was the decision to activate the Urban Renewal Plan long under consideration, which eventually will add approximately 20 acres south of the campus and provide opportunity for the further development of the University.

"In academic matters the decision reached by the Willamette faculty after two years of study, to activate the 4-course plan and reorganize the Willamette curriculum, is a major step. In the long run I would anticipate that this would add greatly to the educational stability and depth of the educational program on the campus."

The important actions of the Board of Trustees through its various committees include: "(1) The establishment of new limits of enrollment in the undergraduate program at 1500 and the College of Law at 300; (2) the strengthening of the faculty by adding 22 new members in the undergraduate program and 6 members in law during the next 8 years; (3) the formal action on plans to start construction on the Truman Collins Legal Center; (4) creation of the special committee to make further studies on the proposed Graduate Studies in Administration; and (5) a general plan of financing the developments of the University over the next 8 years."

Highlights of progress

The 38-page report brought the Board of Trustees up-to-date on all phases of the Willamette year. Some of the more important items are summarized below:

The curriculum revision which will begin in the fall of 1967 will reduce the number of courses that a student takes at any particular time and allow for greater depth in course offerings. This will be the first time in 35 years that the faculty has made a complete review and reorganization of the curriculum. Under the new plan 30 courses will be required for graduation rather than the previous semester hour method of calculating requirements.

The College of Music will open this fall with an increased enrollment of highly qualified students. During the past year the orchestra has been enlarged to become the Salem Community Symphony Association, enlisting the support of the townspeople and providing greater opportunities to students. The Contemporary Arts Festival initiated this spring included not only musical events, but also literature, art and drama. Enthusiasm grew as the week-long Festival progressed and some events were moved to larger halls to accommodate unexpectedly large attendance. Newspapers as far away as Florida, New York, Philadelphia and Boston carried articles about the Festival's events.

The College of Law attracts an ever increasing constituency. Inquiries this year numbered 1293 from every section of the country and several foreign countries, although enrollment has remained stationary for four years due to the limitations of the present law building. The fall entering class was filled on April 1, when there were three completed applications on hand for each available place. On May 6 the "Pre-Law Day" brought to the campus 140 pre-law students from 20 colleges and universities.

"The Willamette campus continues to be a vital, dynamic community with 1400 students engaged in hard work, diligent inquiry, vigorous activities and spiritual growth. In keeping with the temper of the times, the academic production demands more and more of students if they are to be successful. This in turn requires more intensive study and longer hours. The pressures of academic life also require outlets and this in turn demands the best possible program of constructive activities in wholesome sports, artistic expression and social life. The creation of the new Student Center in Matthews Hall has been a desirable move and has been appreciated and used by the students and faculty alike. This does not alleviate the need for a genuine student union building with adequate facilities for student activity and recreation."

In the Honors Program a sophomore student's essay placed fourth in the nation in the Atlantic Monthly's college writing contest and will be published in their winter's booklet. During the coming year this program will be directed by Dean-Elect Byron Doenges who created the Honors work in the College of Liberal Arts at Indiana University.

On the subject of gifts and grants Dr. Smith said, "It is a pleasure to report that for the second time in the past three years the total support of Willamette has exceeded one million dollars." Average for the three years was $1,034,210. The operating income for the past year exceeded $2.5 million for the first time in history.

The rising costs of education have increased the need for student financial aid. During the past year students have received approximately $190,000 in scholarships and financial grants and a sum of nearly $100,000 from various sources has been dispensed in student loans. Our students have made an exceptionally fine record in repayment of these loans. A full-time man has been added to the staff to solicit scholarship and financial aid funds.

In campus religious life Willamette is fortunate in having the leadership of Chaplain Calvin McConnell. During the last semester he has been most ably assisted by Chaplain Merlin McGladrey, who came to us after a career as chaplain in the Air Force. Mr. McConnell defines the primary work of the chaplains as "pastors within the University parish." As such they not only head a broad religious program of student activities both on and off the campus, but spend much of their time in counseling and advising.

"In athletics, Willamette continues with the philosophy that it is desirable to have an active program of varsity sports which are completely amateur and provide interesting activities for the participants and spectators. This year the Conference voted to include Pacific Lutheran, which will bring the number of participating schools to seven. The Conference agreement insists on academic competence as a basis for participation and limits financial aid to a demonstrated need as evaluated by the College Scholarship Service. As a result the Northwest Conference is as evenly balanced as it has been at any time in its history."

"The Bishop Health Center continues to provide a most valuable service to the students," says the President. Outpatients during the year have numbered 8502 and 351 inpatients have added up a total of 815 patient days. The only epidemic was a mild contagion of measles. In quoting Dr. Purvine, President Smith points out that additional personnel is needed for counseling "which would reduce the need for psychiatric care. The increase in this kind of help has been tremendous over the last quarter century. It is my personal belief that this results not only from the more complicated society in which we live, but also from the permissive atmosphere in which a great many of our young people grow up in their homes and schools before entering college."

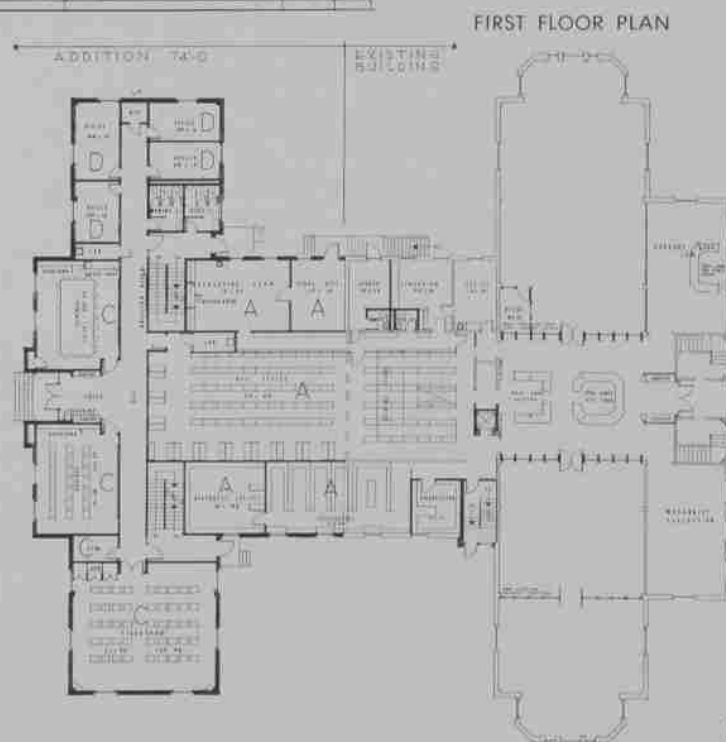

"In conclusion, as President of Willamette University for 23 years I want again to express my appreciation to every member of the Willamette Board of Trustees for your friendship, your loyalty and your devotion to the service of Willamette. With the plans you have made for the future, the University can do no other than to go from greatness to greatness. I have been most pleased to have the privilege of dedicating these past 23 years with you in the service of this institution."

Development plans make progress

The City of Salem has begun the work of clearing the Urban Renewal area which will add 21 acres to the Willamette University campus, having established an office on the site for this purpose. The University is also preparing to clear other land adjoining the campus, which had been acquired by previous purchase.

The beginning of construction on the Collins Legal Center must await the removal of the old apartment house west of the campus known as Frederickson Hall. It is hoped that work can begin this fall on three projects under a single contract. These are the Legal Center; the connecting structure between Lausanne and Doney Halls which will provide housing for 30 girls and a new kitchen to serve both residences; and the library addition which will double stack space and add faculty offices and classrooms.

Students aid pilot program at Oregon School for the Blind

By BOB WOODLE

About 40 Willamette students took part this past year in a pilot program to aid multi-handicapped blind children at the Oregon State School for the Blind. In addition to blindness, some of these children have disabling neurological conditions such as cerebral palsy and epilepsy.

A staff of seven professionals and numerous volunteers from Willamette and the community, with support from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, are seeking to establish a means of identifying blind children who had been wrongly classed as retarded, and developing a treatment-scholastic program for them.

A basic theory in the three-year program just completing its first year is that children may be "experientially" deprived due to certain underlying deficiencies in early childhood. L. H. Weiner, in his book "Educating the Emotionally Disturbed Blind Child," contends that all blind children inevitably suffer some degree of stimulus deprivation. Unless there is sufficient other stimulation in infancy to compensate for the lack of visual experience, a blind child is more prone than the normal child to develop "an inward turning of behavior and thought patterns."

With this in mind, Mr. Charles Woodcock, superintendent, and Mrs. Mary E. Rigby, supervising teacher at the School for the Blind, are directing the curriculum for 13 children between the ages of four and twelve. Emphasis is placed on the development of concepts by providing many and varied experiences through large amounts of sensory stimulation and extensive physical exercise.

Willamette's volunteers, with Chaplain Cal McConnell serving as coordinator, offered at least an hour each week in three areas: exercising, music lessons, and manual stimulation.

Special exercises are prescribed for each child, with the volunteers manually moving the child's arms, legs and neck to develop muscles that weren't sufficiently developed in infancy. While moving the appendages, the nerve endings of the knees, toes, fingers and elbows are stimulated by dragging them against the texture of the treatment table. Four sessions of five minutes each are conducted for each child daily.

Other physical exercises are provided to stimulate undeveloped muscles and establish movement patterns. Such things as bowling, roller skating, walking, swinging, bouncing, sliding and a modified version of wrestling with some of the personnel are included in the physical program.

Music is just one phase of auditory stimulation in the program. It is felt that silence affects blind children in the same way that wearing a blindfold affects seeing people, so music has aided in cutting down the number of emotional outbursts and undesirable mannerisms mistakenly referred to as "blindisms." Auditory stimuli is also provided by special records of sounds such as bird songs, animal sounds and other identifiable noises.

The child also learns to recognize a basic inventory of tastes, odors, forms and textures. "In short," states Mrs. Rigby, "other senses are used to make the child acquainted with every aspect of his own body and surroundings, and to help him understand the quality and use of objects and persons around him."

Though the aid of Willamette students and other volunteers in the community is vital to the program, the experience has also been a rewarding one for the volunteers.

While working with the blind children, senior Martha Sneary, Oakland, Calif., a sociology major, "found" her future vocation, that of answering a need in the education of the handicapped. Just prior to graduation she received a fellowship from the University of Michigan for studies in education of the visually handicapped.

Another sociology major commented that rather than just spending her four years at Willamette preparing to be of future service, the program at the School for the Blind allows her actually to be of service now during her schooling.

One boy, thankful that he'd been blessed with sight and no physical handicaps, expressed a feeling of obligation in the program, a chance to share thankfully his good fortune with those not similarly blessed.

Chaplain McConnell indicated that the general feeling of the Willamette students is that at last they have found a place where they can see some of the world's needs and they are motivated by desire to accomplish something where there is a real need.

"And don't sell the personal relationship short," he added, "because we feel the friendships and personal contact with the children is every bit as therapeutic as some of the other facets of the program. Some of our students are even writing to children at the school during the summer and looking forward to resuming their service in the fall. This certainly isn't the type of program where someone's arm has to be twisted to offer services."

Mrs. Rigby has been pleased with progress to date, but was quick to point out that by its nature, no conclusions can be drawn in the program until the three-year results are in. She has listed four significant questions that they hope to have answers for in 1967.

- (1) Can sufficient stimulation be provided through useable senses to insure adequate neurological development?
- (2) What types of experiences will best promote normal development?
- (3) What factors are meaningful in determining the type of child this program can benefit?
- (4) What criteria can be established to determine the readiness of a child to leave the program, either for regular school or to some other situation?

Whatever the results, Willamette students are fortunate in having the opportunity to participate in this significant pilot program concerned with the welfare of multi-handicapped children.

things than I had before. At the picnic of the Bush Park and in the American home, I have had the happiest and the most significant time in my life. I have an idea about the American way of life pretty well. I felt deeply in my mind that Americans and Japanese are of the same mind.

This time we visited the United States and saw many things. Next time, please come to Japan and see my country.

Lastly let me express again our thanks to you in Japanese style:

とうとうありかたひにござります(テ).

Mr. Osamu Ikeyama, Student,
International College of Commerce

I have no words to express my hearty gratitude for your having made it possible for us to spend two weeks in Willamette University.

During our stay here, we have had many splendid experiences. Even now, I remember quite well those precious experiences I had a week ago as if they happened only yesterday. Among the experiences I had, I cannot forget such as I had on the first when I was invited to a certain family. I was indeed afraid of being laughed at, for I did not know what to do in an American family. I mean I was at a loss, "How to express," and "How to behave." I was beside myself with joy to find that we, each other, could make ourselves understood, even though there were many funny translations in communications.

The lessons I took in American Studies Seminar was of great interest and more profitable than I had expected. And all the things that I have experienced here will, undoubtedly, play a great important role in the friendly relationship between the United States of America and Japan.

I'm sure it is inestimable that these valuable events are much useful for my future. And I will never forget these precious sweet memories which I carry with me long after returned to Japan.

Thank you for your listening to me.

Dean Reese tells legislators:

Crime victim is the forgotten man

Should the state pay the victim of a crime for his loss as well as punish the criminal?

"Yes," says Dean Seward Reese of Willamette University College of Law. He urged the Oregon legislature to pass a bill providing for such payment.

The bill is the first of its kind ever introduced in a state legislature of the United States, Dean Reese said at a public hearing.

With the above paragraphs the Christian Science Monitor opened a feature story on the proposed legislation in Oregon.

Dean Reese appeared before the Judiciary Subcommittee of the legislature, arguing from a strongly worded brief in support of the measure. It is not a new idea, said the Dean, who quoted from the Code of Hammurabi (1950 B.C.):

"If the brigand be not captured, the man who has been robbed shall, in the presence of God, make an itemized statement of his loss, and the city and governor in whose province and jurisdiction the robbery was committed shall compensate him for whatever was lost."

Before a Congressional Committee considering crime in the District of Columbia a witness stated his belief "that something seems to have gone awry in adjusting the delicate balance of justice, and that a growing preoccupation with the rights of the criminal has been accompanied by a growing neglect of the rights of the public."

The citizen pays his taxes for the police to protect him from the criminal, argued the Dean. When the city, state, or nation fails to fulfill its obligation and the citizen is robbed, his house burglarized, his body wounded and maimed, the state imposes a fine on the criminal and keeps the money while the victim suffers physically and mentally and is perhaps unable to work. In the 19th century a Belgian with biting sarcasm said, ". . . the victim has his consolation; he can think that by taxes he has contributed toward the paternal care which has guarded the criminal during his stay in prison."

Dean Reese also contended for restitution to the victim by the criminal. "It is a little difficult to understand," he said, "how a criminal can pay his debt to society and the victim go uncompensated. When the criminal's wages in prison, or his property, are taken to compensate the individual his crime and the restitution for it take on a different and concrete aspect. He may well look upon repeating the crime in a little different light."

The proposed legislation sets up a Criminal Injuries Compensation Commission which may award compensation for expenses incurred by the victim's injury or death, loss of incapacity to work, loss to dependents from the victim's death, and for pain and suffering of the victim. But the loss for incapacity for work is only $20 per week, with an additional $2 for dependent wife and $1 for each dependent child. For pecuniary loss the sum shall not exceed $2,000, and for pain and suffering the sum of $1,000.

After the hearing the bill was referred to the Ways and Means Committee, where it remained when the legislature adjourned. There was no expressed opposition to the bill, but it was not favorably reported because the committee lacked any experience from which to estimate the extent of the financial commitment.

The measure evoked little public interest although it stirred a scattering of newspaper comment from California to New Jersey. The Justice Department in Washington picked up the Monitor story and wrote Dean Reese for a copy of the bill, with his comments specifically on the bill's safeguards against fraud.

"The lack of impact of the bill this year is no measure of its potential," wrote the Monitor reporter. "Its fate was usual here for such novel legislation. Some bills of merit are introduced several times before they attract general interest."

Du Pont scientist, developer of nylon, dies in California

Dr. George W. Rigby, '27

In 1932, five years after his graduation from Willamette, Dr. Rigby was assigned to the Du Pont Experimental Station in Wilmington, Del., to work on new cellulose derivatives. Meanwhile he had completed his graduate work at Washington State University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he received his Ph.D. degree in 1930.

He was a member of the original research team which, in 1934, started the work that brought out the revolutionary synthetic called nylon. After perfecting the new plastic and opening a door to its multiple forms and uses, the team went on to develop the manufacturing processes that have enabled the Du Pont Company to supply industry with a new substance of almost illimitable usefulness.

He continued other research on cellulose amines, nylon derivatives, tetrafluoroethylene and polyethylene. He spent two years in Europe as technical representative for Du Pont's International Department.

In 1957 Dr. Rigby received from Willamette the honorary degree of Doctor of Science and also delivered one of the Alumni Day lectures in which he described the development of nylon and demonstrated some of its many applications.

He was the author of many scientific articles and research papers in his field. More than 30 patents were granted on his work. He served on numerous important committees, including the National Defense Research Committee during World War II.

Dr. Rigby is survived by his wife, the former Virginia Merle Crites, who is also a Willamette graduate and a past president of the Delaware Division of the American Association of University Women.

He retired in March of this year at age 60 and his death occurred on July 27. The Rigbys had planned to establish their retirement home in Hawaii.

Bearcats look good for coming year

After a mediocre spring sport showing in the Northwest Conference which included a championship in golf, third places in tennis and track and fourth in baseball, Bearcat fans are anxiously awaiting the start of this fall's football campaign.

With 26 lettermen returning, including Little All-American tackle Bob Burles and 12 other gridders who received first team or honorable mention berths on the 1964 NWC team, Willamette could field its strongest team since the undefeated 1960 campaign. Pre-season comparisons are already being drawn with the power-packed 1958 club.

The entire defensive unit returns that set a NWC record last year by holding University of Puget Sound to minus 48 yards rushing, headed by Burles and three-time NWC all-star end Bruce Anderson.

Despite another rugged schedule that includes Humboldt State College and University of Nevada in addition to non-conference foe and traditional opponent UPS, coach Ted Ogdahl is quite optimistic. He is pleased with what he called "good depth and experience," stating that "we should be tough."

Both Ogdahl and assistant Norm Chapman are highly pleased with the freshmen prospects and transfer students who have been lined up for this fall. "On paper, it's as fine an incoming group as we've had," claimed Ogdahl, who starts his 14th season at the Bearcat helm this fall.

In the spring, Ogdahl guided his last track team to a third place finish, just four points behind Whitman. Lewis and Clark won the title. He relinquishes his track reins next spring to Dr. Charles Bowles, assistant to Bill Bowerman at the University of Oregon the past four years. Bowles' Frosh track teams were undefeated at Oregon.

Bowles will be inheriting a young group of thinclads, and Burles will be returning next spring after finishing second in the national meet this year in the 440-yard intermediate hurdles.

Chapman's golf squad regained the NWC title this season, the 13th time in the past 16 years. Three of the Bearcat linksmen, Gary Childs, Mike Alley and John Orr, made the four-man All-NWC golf team. All three return next year with the rest of the 'Cat squad, which posted a 7-6-2 record in all matches.

Willamette's tennis team took a back seat to powerful Whitman and Lewis and Clark this spring. It was Whitman's third straight crown. Coach Les Sparks' netmen compiled a 7-8 dual match record on the season.

John Lewis' baseball team rallied strong at the end of the season to finish fourth in the league while posting a 6-9 conference record and 10-13 mark overall. Thin pitching depth proved to be the Bearcats' downfall. One hurler, however, Sam Nebel, was named to the All-NWC team, along with senior catcher Ken Anderson. Linfield repeated as conference champs.

Coffee and gumption helped Willamette senior Mike McIntyre survive three sets of oral examinations before receiving his Bachelor of Arts degree in math, physics and chemistry. One of the rare triple majors to graduate from the University, Mike was justly rewarded with a $3400 fellowship to Yale University for graduate study in physical chemistry.

Three honorary doctorates conferred

Honorary doctorate degrees were conferred upon three distinguished men during Willamette's commencement ceremonies in June. Two of the three are Willamette graduates, Robert M. Sayre, '49, who delivered the commencement address, and Rev. Lawrence E. Guderian, '39, while the third was Justice Homer R. Spence, a Stanford law graduate whose two sons, Schuyler and Maynard, attended Willamette.

Sayre, valedictorian of his class, is currently Deputy Assistant Secretary for Inter-American Affairs and an advisor to President Johnson on Latin America. He spoke to the 268 graduates on "Developments in Hemisphere Policy" in conjunction with the recent turmoil in the Dominican Republic.

A law graduate of George Washington University, Sayre also earned an M.A. in economics from Stanford in 1960. His assignments in Latin America have included work in Peru, Cuba and Mexico as well as other State Department tasks in Washington, D.C.

Rev. Guderian, pastor of the Albany Methodist Church, is currently Chairman of the Methodist Board of Education in Oregon. He earned his divinity degree at Garrett Theological Seminary and the Master of Sacred Theology degree at the Pacific School of Religion. A trustee of Willamette from 1957-63, Rev. Guderian also taught religion at the University for two years.

Justice Spence is a retired Justice of the California Supreme Court. On the Board of Trustees at Stanford, he is also President of the Stanford Associates and a former member of the California legislature. Both Justice Spence and Sayre received honorary doctor of laws degrees, while Rev. Guderian was granted an honorary doctor of divinity degree.

Sayre told the graduates that the future looks brighter for resisting Communist influence in Latin America. "We can look at Latin America today and take considerable satisfaction in the broadened opportunities achieved for the people. The Alliance for Progress is now moving forward . . . and today touches directly the lives of nearly half of the 200 million people."

He doesn't regard the current political crisis in the Dominican Republic as the main event in Latin America, but rather "The paramount issue in Latin America is today and has been for some time the social and economic development of that vast region."

New teachers join faculty

Twelve new faculty members will be on hand for the start of Willamette's academic year in September and Dr. Paul Trueblood, professor of English, has returned from a year's sabbatical in Europe to resume his position as head of the English department.

Included in the recent appointments is Dr. Byron F. Doenges, dean-elect in liberal arts to replace Dean Robert Gregg in 1966. Dean Doenges is from Indiana University and will be in charge of implementing the four course, two semester academic plan at Willamette by 1967, a complete curriculum revision.

A brief biographical sketch of the newcomers follows:

—Henry J. Bailey, associate professor of law; attended U.S. Naval Academy for three years, received B.A. from Pennsylvania State University in 1939 and LL.B. from Yale Law School in 1947. He is currently legal editor of the Banking Law Journal in Boston and has had a wide experience as a legal writer in banking and commercial law.

—Dr. Charles Bowles, assistant professor of physical education and track coach; received B.A. and M.S. in chemistry at the University of Portland and Ph.D. in physical education at the University of Oregon. He coached at the U. of Portland in 1950-51 and Lake Oswego High School from 1951-61. At Oregon, where he served as assistant to Bill Bowerman, his Frosh track teams have been undefeated. Former track coach Ted Ogdahl will still handle football coaching.

—R. Darwin Burroughs, visiting professor of biology; received B.A. from Nebraska Wesleyan in 1924 and M.S. from Princeton in 1925. He taught biology at Willamette from 1925-27 and later at Oklahoma City College and Macalester College (Minn.). Since 1942 he has been with the State of Michigan Department of Conservation. He will instruct for one semester while Dr. Cecil Monk is on sabbatical leave.

—Jon J. Daykin, instructor of sociology; received B.A. and M.A. from the University of Mississippi where he served as a teaching assistant this past year. He concentrated on the fields of criminology, penology and delinquency.

—Miss Mary L. Hammack, part time assistant professor of education; received B.A. from Oregon College of Education and M.A. from the University of Oregon. She is the former school supervisor and curriculum consultant for Marion County.

—Tom Robin Harris, visiting instructor of music; received B.M. and M.M. from Syracuse University where he also served as instructor of organ this past year. He was the national winner of the student organ division of the Federation of Music Clubs of America in 1961. He replaces Josef Schnelker for one year while Prof. Schnelker studies on a sabbatical leave in Germany.

—Miss Emilie Kremer, instructor of German; received B.A. from Colorado College in 1954, translator and interpreter certificate from the University of Vienna in 1960 and M.A. from University of California at Berkeley this year. She has taught at the Universities of Salzburg (Austria), San Francisco and Santa Clara and speaks four languages, English, German, French and Czechoslovakian.

—Jatindra Mukerji, College of Law librarian; received B.A., M.A. and LL.B. from University of Allahabad (India) 1945-51, Bachelor of Library Science from U. of Aligarh, 1959, and Master of Law Library Science from U. of Washington, 1964. He was formerly assistant law librarian at the King County Court Library in Seattle and Multnomah Court Library in Portland.

—James G. Philips, instructor of German; received B.A. from University of California at Berkeley, M.A. from Middlebury College (Vt.). He is currently working for his Ph.D. at the University of Mainz in Germany. He was an interpreter and translator in the Air Force for four years and taught two years at the University of California at Riverside.

—Capt. David Weiland, assistant professor of air science; received B.A. from the University of Portland. Commissioned in the Air Force through the ROTC program, Capt. Weiland's last assignment was flying F-105 jets out of Ramstein, Germany.

—Miss Marian K. Woodall, instructor of English; received B.A. from University of Idaho in 1962 and M.A. at University of Arizona, 1964, where she also served as instructor of English. This past year she has taught at Lewis-Clark Teachers College at Lewiston, Idaho.

Those leaving the University include professor of German Dr. Daniel Schulze and law librarian Alta Rieck, retirement; professor of organ Josef Schnelker and biology professor Dr. Cecil Monk, sabbatical leaves (the latter for one semester only); English instructor Adele Birnbaum, leave of absence; Charles Jens, law; Francine Kimball, French; Dr. Mary DeMarr, English; Dean Orton, sociology; Capt. Lash Laker, air science; Henry Sorick, education; and Margaret Thomas, art, are all leaving for new positions. Assistant professor of cello, Miss Nona Pyron, is on her second year leave of absence.
