TV Personality to Give Lecture Series

Dr. Frank Baxter, nationally known educator, lecturer and TV personality, will be guest speaker at the second annual Willamette Lecture Series March 5 and 6.

Dr. Baxter is professor of English at the University of Southern California. An eminent Shakespearean scholar, he has won TV's top awards simply by standing in front of a television camera and doing the same thing he has done for 26 years in his classes—lecturing and reading. Called TV's most surprising success, he is winner of three Emmys (TV's equivalent of Hollywood's Oscar) in three years and has also won the coveted Peabody Award last spring.

He distinguished himself through the medium with programs such as "Now and Then," "Renaissance on TV," and "Shakespeare on TV," the latter which was the first college course to be taught on TV for academic credit in the West, ended up the largest English class in all history.

He also plays the role of Dr. Research in the popular new series of one-hour color TV programs on science. The first, "Our Mr. Sun," (in which Gerald Pearson, '26, and Daryl Chapin, '27, appeared) was telecast in November.

The annual lecture series, established by the George H. Atkinson fund, draws noted speakers in various fields of interest to the campus. There is no charge for the lectures which are held in the Fine Arts Auditorium and the interested public is invited to attend.

Annual Spring Choir Trip Scheduled

The annual spring choir tour, March 29 through April 8, includes performances in cities of Southern Oregon and Northern California. The tentative itinerary is as follows: Roseburg, Ore., March 29; Coquille, Ore., March 30; Medford, Ore., March 31; Marysville, Calif., April 2; Oakland, Calif., April 3; Napa, Calif., April 4; Woodland, Calif., April 5; Grants Pass, Ore., April 6.

Drama

An interesting evening is in store for those who attend "The Victors," a drama by the French contemporary playwright Jean Paul Sartre, March 1 and 2. This is the second production of the drama department this year.

Summed up by director Robert Putnam, the play is an ironical situation showing the position of the individual caught in hopeless circumstances. Setting is a French village during World War II, the characters being French collaborators, German troopers, and members of the underground. Tickets available at Stevens and Son Jewelers or you may write "Willamette University Theatre." All tickets are one dollar and all seats are reserved.

Art Gallery Shows Woodcuts

On exhibit for the month of January in the Art Gallery, the Fine Arts building is a colorful and unusual showing of woodcuts by Robert Huck.

Mr. Huck is assistant art professor at Oregon State College. He received his BA at Colorado College in 1950 and his MA in Fine Arts in 1952, from the University of Colorado. He received a Fulbright Scholarship to Rome, Italy in 1954-55.

Huck started print making in 1950 in all media, but found woodcuts to be the most suited to his temperament and ideas. He is able to get strength and boldness from his woodcuts, which make them very forceful and colorful. His prints range in color from black and whites to as many as four and five colors. All prints in the woodcut media are hand printed in the traditional manner using rollers and a kitchen spoon to transfer ink from the blocks to the paper. Almost all the prints use Japanese or mulberry papers.

Mr. Huck has won over 20 awards in museums throughout the United States. He has exhibited in one man shows in many parts of the United States and in Italy.

The gallery is open to the public every week day from nine in the morning until four in the afternoon.

Coming Events . . .

- January 24 ..... Distinguished Artists Series—
Cesare Valletti, tenor
- February 7 ..... Founders' and Benefactors' Day

Band to Tour Southern Oregon

The University band will tour Southern Oregon starting February 11. The tentative schedule is as follows: February 11, Corvallis, Mapleton, Florence; February 12, Reedsport, Glendale; February 13, Eagle Point, Central Point, Medford; February 14, Ashland, Mt. Shasta, Calif., and Klamath Falls; February 15, Bend, Ore.

Freshman Glee

Circle March 23 as a date to remember and keep: it's the 49th annual Freshman Glee, this year's theme being "A Mater." Freshman John Bergstrom, a native of Glendale, Sweden and under an exchange student program, will head this year's production. A limited number of tickets will be available to alumni. Call or write your alumni office early.

Salem alums will host an after Glee get-together at Doan Hall.

Jose Iturbi's recent appearance on the Willamette campus thrilled a filled auditorium. One Salemite expressed the sentiment of the audience in a letter to the STATESMAN when she said "... Hours like Mr. Iturbi gave us are divine . . . appreciate it with every corner of your heart, relish it and feed on it for a long time."

Willamette's Distinguished Artists Series is now in its seventh year of sponsorship by the student managers of ASWU.

Because of the enthusiasm of the Series managers and committeemen, there have been introduced to Salem such artists as Marian Anderson, Jan Peerce, Alec Templeton, Rubenstein, Menuhin, Piatigorsky, and Depaur Infantry Chorus.

In bringing Metropolitan Opera stars and Carnegie Hall artists to the University, the students found that they could not only satisfy their own esthetic appetites, but enrich the culture of the entire Salem community.

It is obvious that Salemites appreciate Willamette's contribution of such distinguished artists as those who have appeared in the beautiful Fine Arts auditorium. The community's interest and patronage assure more of the same high-calibre artists in future Distinguished Artists Series programs.

THE HUMANITIES

by Edward C. Wells

As we consider the role of the Liberal Arts College and its relationship to the business world, it is appropriate first to consider the far broader idea of the importance of the Liberal Arts, or the Humanities, if you prefer the latter term, to our entire world.

It is not uncommon for surprise to be expressed when a business executive speaks for the record on his conviction that more than scientific knowledge is required for success if not in fact for survival, in the business world.

Before I join again with those who have expressed themselves on this subject, I would like to voice my own conviction that far more than scientific knowledge is required in all fields of our present and future human endeavors if our world itself is to go forward rather than backward.

I believe this to be true in no less degree in the business world, and furthermore that the truth of the matter is being ever more eagerly sought and accepted by business leaders in every industry.

I am associated with an industry which produces ever more complex products as the years go by, and I have therefore been painfully aware of the fact that we do not have an unlimited supply of people highly trained in engineering and scientific fields. If we consider our future requirements as well as our present predicament, however, I think we must admit that the apparent shortage of scientific personnel is not our principal problem.

Specialization Inadequate

Complex products place ever increasing demands upon our accumulation of scientific knowledge and upon our creative abilities, but the world we live in, and this includes the world of business, also makes ever increasing demands upon its people in fields other than that of science.

I do not intend here to make a case entirely against specialized scientific training and entirely for training limited to the liberal arts. A man of letters may have just as limited a field of interest and activity as a man of science, if he so chooses, and if in his choice he is encouraged or restricted as the case may be by rules designed along purely academic lines.

I do believe, however, that it is important to offer to our students of the sciences the opportunity to study the liberal arts, and to offer the liberal arts students the opportunity to study at least the elementary facts and methods of science.

Perhaps providing the opportunity is not enough: both incentives and encouragement may be necessary.

Why is this important to business and industry? For the same reason that it is important to all elements of our society. In this world of ours, no one can really be self sufficient. In an inter-dependent society, human understanding is one of the foundation stones. Understanding requires the ability to communicate — communication requires common interests, common knowledge, common language. The limited man of letters cannot communicate with the limited man of science, nor can they ever really understand each other if they choose to remain in individual and collective isolation.

To be somewhat more specific in relation to the business world, I believe that this subject has two important aspects worth considering. One aspect is economic, relating to the collective financial success of the enterprise and the individual financial well being of stockholders and employees. The other aspect relates to the long term contribution which can be made to society by a business enterprise and the correlative contributions by individuals.

Edward C. Wells, '31, is Vice President, Engineering at Boeing Airplane Company, Seattle, Washington.

Mr. Wells attended Willamette from 1927 to 1929; BA, Stanford University 1931 with great distinction; Doctor of Laws, University of Portland, 1946. Since his college graduation, Mr. Wells has been employed by the Boeing Airplane Company. Starting as a draftsman and engineer, he was appointed to his present position in 1948. In charge of preliminary design for Boeing Model 299 airplane, prototype of Model B-17, Boeing Flying Fortress; followed design of this model through all phases of development since 1934.

He received the Lawrence Sperry Award of Aeronautical Science for contributions to art of airplane design with special reference to 4-engined aircraft in 1942 — awarded the Fawcett Aviation Award in 1944 — selected Seattle's Young Man of the Year in 1943. He has served Willamette as Vocational Counselor on Engineering and is a member of the Institute of Aeronautical Science, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the Society of Aeronautical Engineers, Tau Beta Pi and Phi Beta Kappa scholastic honor societies. Doctor of Science honorary was conferred upon him by Willamette in 1953.

Mr. Wells was married to Dorothy E. Ostlund in 1934 and they have two children; Laurie Jo and Edward Elliott.

S AND INDUSTRY

by Dr. Paul G. Trueblood

The vital importance of the humanities in American civilization is only now becoming belatedly recognized. In contrast, the crucial importance of the sciences has long been realized and is too obvious to require either argument or illustration. But though in the modern era the sciences have served and will continue to serve us very well indeed—or very ill indeed, in exact ratio to the degree of man's sanity or insanity—it is the services of the humanities which we desperately need. The leadership imperatively demanded in this time of nuclear and ideological fission, equally explosive, is the leadership which a broad education in the humanities can best provide. The foundational, and virtually prerequisite, importance of humanistic training is being recognized as preparatory not only to the professions of university teaching, ministry, law, and medicine, but, likewise, to positions of executive leadership, management, counseling, and public relations in government, business, and industry. The indispensable qualities required for success in all the foregoing are, rather than technical knowledge, the qualities of breadth and depth of judgment, ingenuity, imagination, creativity, and vision. These qualities are the proper fruits of a humanistic education.

Last spring Willamette University inaugurated the annual Willamette University Lecture Series under the wise and generous sponsorship of The Atkinson Fund Committee. This is in itself telling evidence at our own academic doorstep of the premium placed on the humanities by modern men of business and industry endowed with wisdom and vision. Dr. Umphrey Lee, Chancellor of Southern Methodist University, initiated the annual lecture series with a distinction and force which left a lasting impression on this campus. One of Dr. Lee's most telling utterances is pertinent here. After paying a deserved tribute to the importance of the sciences in modern civilization, Dr. Lee declared, "The great ideals of society, of humanity, are not to be found in the books of science and mathematics. They are to be found in the pages of history, philosophy, religion, art, and literature."

Business: The New Outlook

Business and industry are beginning to recognize the prime importance of a liberal arts or humanities training as a requisite to success in business executiveship, managership, personnel direction, and public relations. A striking proof of this is the article in the Atlantic for March, 1956, entitled "Management in Search of Men," by David A. Shepard, a Director of Jersey Standard. "We are vitally interested," he writes, "in getting properly educated young men and women as present employees and future leaders." He quotes Irving S. Olds, retired Board Chairman of United States Steel, thus, "The most difficult problems American enterprise faces today are neither scientific nor technical, but lie chiefly in the realm of what is embraced in a liberal arts education." A survey of Standard Oil's college graduate employees in a recent year showed that 33 per cent had had a non-technical liberal arts education. Mr. Shepard concludes his article, "If I were a professor of humanities concerned with the role of my subject in this modern world, I should be greatly heartened by the change in attitude which seems to me apparent among business organizations today. More and more they are developing a keen interest in . . . the humanities. Such a movement will surely help to create career opportunities for many liberal arts specialists, including historians, psychologists, anthropologists, personnel and public relations experts, and writers. This situation indicates to me that . . . business is really offering more opportunities for liberal arts graduates than ever before."

The philosophy behind this changed attitude of business and industry to-

Dr. Paul G. Trueblood, '28, is Professor and Head of the English Department at Willamette University. He came to Willamette from the University of Oregon, where he had been visiting professor for two years. Dr. Trueblood has also taught at University of Idaho and University of Washington. His A.M. and Ph.D. were earned at Duke University.

A recognized Byron scholar, Dr. Trueblood is author of "The Flowering of Byron's Genius" and "Lord Byron, Champion of Freedom." In 1952 he was awarded "Fellow of American Council of Learned Societies."

Dr. Trueblood and his wife, Helen (Churchill) have two daughters. Susan is enrolled as a freshman at Willamette this year.

ward the humanities is fully set forth in the June, 1955, issue of Harvard Business Review in an article entitled "Liberal Arts As Training For Business" by Frederic E. Pamp, Jr., Division Manager of the American Management Association. Worthy of special note is the fact that Dr. Pamp has his Ph.D. in English and was formerly a professor of humanities at the University of Chicago. In this article he discusses the new and increased demands upon top management which training in the sciences cannot meet. He shows how the

CHAPLAIN NAMED

Death Claims Dr. Richards

Dr. Ernest C. Richards, 86, distinguished professor emeritus of English and literature, passed away in November at a Salem nursing home after a long illness. Dr. Richards was on the faculty for 23 years, retiring in 1940. He received his BA and Master's degrees from Morningside College in Iowa and earned his doctorate in literature at Boston University. He was a member of the Masonic and Odd Fellows lodges and of the First Methodist Church.

Surviving is his widow, Myrta (Millner) who lives at 1240 N. 21st St., Salem, Ore.

Grants

Two grants have been received this fall and winter.

A grant of approximately $6,000 was received in January from the Joy Turner Moses trust. The money will be invested in Willamette endowment and interest gained will be used to establish a loan fund for needy students.

Mrs. Joy Moses Turner graduated in 1910 from the Willamette University school of music.

The Esso education foundation of Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, approved an unrestricted grant of $2,000 to the University this fall. The funds will be devoted entirely to the advancement in faculty salaries, which were approved last year.

Willamette Day

One hundred thirty-five churches in Oregon, representing over 40,000 Methodists in the state, observed the 13th annual Willamette University Day on Nov. 11.

Through the observance of Willamette Day and conference budget, these churches have increased their financial support from $1600 in 1943 to over $15,000 annually.

Campus Drives

Philanthropic projects organized by students this semester have included a record and book drive for patients at the mental hospital and toy drives and parties for under-privileged children, Fairview home patients and girls from Hillcrest home. Students have provided monthly entertainment for patients at the state hospital, and a Unesco-sponsored drive through Salem for clothing for distribution overseas by the American Friends Service organization was conducted in January.

Founders' Day

Founders and Benefactors Day will honor Mr. W. H. Willson and the Honorable A. E. Eaton.

Pat Farley, a senior student, will speak on Mr. W. H. Willson, who is being honored as a founder. The late Honorable A. E. Eaton of Union, Oregon, will be honored as a benefactor, in a talk by Miss Donna Leonard, a senior student. Eaton Hall, a gift of Mr. Eaton, houses the offices of administration and general classrooms.

Blood Drive

In a contest between Portland State college, Lewis and Clark, and Portland U for a trophy sponsored by Portland's American Legion, students gave approximately 396 pints of blood to the annual Campus Blood Drive, representing one-third of the student body lining up in the gym to give blood to the Red Cross. Winner of the contest will be announced next month.

Sorority Moves

The Willamette chapter of Chi Omega moved the beginning of the school year, to the former Charles Sprague house on the corner of 14th and Center streets. The three-story red brick house accommodates 25 girls.

Requiem Presented

On December 12th the College of Music performed the Mozart Requiem with the University choir, orchestra, and soloists. Dr. Willis Gates directed the performance. Soloists were Clorinda Topping, soprano; Marjorie Elmgreen Stapp, alto; Don Gleckler, baritone; and Melvin Geist, tenor. One hundred and sixty-five took part in the performance.

Project "M"

Project M—a research study on the socio-economic problems of interstate migrant workers in Oregon has been undertaken by students in the sociology and economics departments. Through field trips and research, the group intends to test the premise that migratory labor is essential to the economic life of agricultural Oregon and to show its direct effect upon the economy of various communities within the state. Results of Project M will be presented to the Oregon Council of Churches, who will combine the material with its own data.

Willamette's first full-time chaplain and counselor on religious life will begin his duties with the opening of spring semester. Culminating a search of more than a year for the man with qualifications desired in a chaplaincy position, Dr. Harley H. Zeigler, former director of the Hawaii school of religion in Honolulu, was named to the post. Included in his schedule will be an upper-division religion course, Spiritual Values in Great Literature.

Zeigler's education background includes study at Boston University where he obtained his MA and Ph.D. degrees. He also received degrees in philosophy, theology and metaphysics from Friedrich Wilhelm University in Berlin and Eberhard Karl University in Tubingen, Germany, where he studied on fellowships.

Dr. Zeigler has been on the faculty of Mt. Union College in Ohio, and the schools of religion at the University of Southern California, University of Iowa, and the University of Hawaii, teaching courses including history, English, Bible, political science, philosophy, religion, and ethics. He received the Pfeiffer scholarship and was a Howard Fellow at Boston University and is a fellow of the Institute of International Education. He has written many articles for newspapers and magazines.

The new chaplain, his wife and two children will arrive in Salem in January.

The appointment of Willamette's first chaplain was made possible through a grant from the Atkinson Fund, which will provide regularly for this office in the future, furnishing additional leadership in strengthening the religious life of the campus.

To Study in Capitol

The seventh set of Willamette students to participate in the Washington Semester program at American University will depart next month for Washington, D. C., for a term of study seminars in the nation's capital.

The four students attending are Joyce Hill, Portland, Ore.; Dean Short, Salem, Ore.; Bob Campbell, Salem, Ore.; Dixie Ruud, Molalla, Ore.

Under the plan, deserving students study in the nation's capital during the second semester of the junior year. Included in the curriculum are 15 hours of class work and seminars, special individual and group projects, and frequent visits to governmental offices.

More than 70 colleges and universities currently are cooperating with the American University in the world's largest inter-institutional educational program.

Phi Kappa Lambda Coming to Campus

The Board of Regents of the society of Phi Kappa Lambda, National Music Honor Society, has voted to establish a chapter of the Society on the Willamette campus.

Phi Kappa Lambda offers public recognition to students who attain high levels of scholarship and achievement in the program, or programs, leading to one of the various degrees in music, or to a liberal arts degree where the major emphasis has been in music.

Formal installation of the Chapter will be held on Monday, February 18, concluding with a program at the 10 a. m. convocation on February 19.

Willamette to Host Collegiate Leaders

Willamette students will host the annual Oregon Federation of Collegiate Leaders conference in February, at which time leaders from ten colleges and universities in Oregon will convene to exchange ideas and solutions to problems of student government.

Christian Resource Week

"Why Christianity?" has been selected as the theme for Christian Resource Week, February 12 to 14. Dr. Randall C. Phillips of the First Methodist church in Burbank, California, will be the chief resource leader and speaker. He is sponsored by the Religion in Education Foundation and is the son of Glen R. Phillips, Methodist Bishop of the Denver area churches.

Lectures in the First Methodist church will be open to the interested public.

Faculty . . .

Dean Seward Reese of the college of law has accepted a visiting professorship spring semester at the college of law at UCLA. Invited by the chancellor of the California school and approved by their law faculty, Reese will teach courses in Evidence and Federal Jurisdiction. During his one-semester absence, the administrative responsibilities of the law school will be assumed by members of Reese's staff.

Dr. Henry C. Kohler of the English department suffered a broken ankle December 7 when he slipped on an icy sidewalk on his way to the campus.

Dr. Kohler was confined during the holidays to his apartment, but reports indicate that he was not lonely. He was showered with attention and gifts—making it an experience to remember.

About four years ago Dr. Kohler missed half a day of classes, but before that it had been 17 years since he missed a class. He is back on campus with the aid of a cane.

Dr. Howard W. Runkel, director of forensics and professor of speech, was appointed to the 1956-57 Pacific Northwest selection committee for Northwest college debate teams to compete in the national forensic tournament at West Point in April.

Prof. Stanley Butler was commissioned by Salem's radio station KGAY to narrate a weekly series of music appreciation programs, "How Do We Listen to Music." The hour-long program is broadcast each Sunday afternoon from 3 to 4 p. m.

Dr. John C. Paulus, professor of law, was appointed this fall to the committee on bar admissions of the Association of American Law Schools.

The national board of American Association of University Women appointed Dr. Martha Springer, professor of biology, to the AAUW committee on standards and recognition of colleges and universities, term of office to last two years.

"The Legacy of the Lokomanya: The Political Philosophy of Bal Gandadhar Tilak," written by Dr. Theodore Shay, assistant professor of political science, was released for distribution by the Oxford University Press late last year. Shay gave his dissertation in part on Tilak, Indian Nationalist leader, and did additional research when he traveled to India last year on a Knickerbocker fellowship.

Dr. Vojtech Andic, professor of economics, was certified by the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. to teach their course in the Christian's Responsibility for World Order under the Leadership Training school held by the Oregon Council of Churches.

During the past few months Willamette faculty members have represented the University at national meetings and conferences throughout the U. S. Melvin H. Geist, dean of the college of music, traveled to Cleveland to attend the annual meeting of the National Association of Schools of Music. Visiting that same city during the Christmas holidays were Dr. Vojtech Andic and Prof. Richard Gillis, present for the annual meeting of the American Economic Association, held in conjunction with the meeting of the Econometric Society.

Prof. Maurice Brennen attended the national conference of the College Band Director's Association in December in Chicago, Ill. He is beginning a two-year term as vice-president of the northwest division of the Association.

Dean Seward Reese and Dr. Reginald Parker traveled to Chicago during vacation to attend the annual meeting of the Association of American Law Schools. Parker was appointed member of the Association's committee on continuing legal education and, in addition, presented a paper on legal philosophy at the convention.

Ted Ogdahl, head football and track coach, was in St. Louis for the NCAA Football Coaches Convention the second week of January. He attended various meetings and clinics at the national meeting.

Dr. Gale Currey, professor of P.E. for women, spent all of last summer in England attending clinics and traveling throughout the country. She was especially interested and took extensive work in modern dance, which she is offering this year for the first time at Willamette.

Dr. William G. Cornelius and Freeman A. Holmer, associate professors of political science, are planning to attend the Western meeting of the National Political Science Association at Los Angeles in February.

A TWO WAY STREET

by Jerry Whipple

Jerry Whipple has been appointed Director of Alumni Affairs and Church Relations. Mr. Whipple joined the faculty last year after being in the lumber business for five years in Drain, Oregon. He did his graduate and under graduate work at the University of Oregon.

Mr. Whipple and his wife, Jean, have three children, Edward (5), Joan (4), and Susan (2).

As your new Alumni Director, my first responsibility is to keep each of you informed of your University—its present program and its future plans. Of course your Alumni Office will also do its best to arrange class reunions, homecomings, special events and keep adequate records.

Last fall the University purchased an addressograph which has enabled us to improve tremendously our records system. Besides adding over a thousand new names, we are now able to select individual classes and professions easily. Your office is also in a position to supply you with addresses of former classmates. Especially are we anxious to help in arranging get-togethers of the Willamette family, and have had or are planning meetings in Portland, Eugene, Coos Bay, Salem and Seattle.

As we grow we hope to be able to plan reunions throughout the country. With the assistance of Mrs. Fravel, your director is also planning a special luncheon for Oregon teachers attending their OEA meeting in Portland this spring. These activities are vital to any alumni organization, and we shall do our best to develop them. Yet it is the University's story of her present program and future plans which give full meaning for an alumni organization, because an effective relationship between the University and alumni must be achieved on a two-way street. A vital part of the University's side of this street demands that it adequately tells the story of "educational crisis."

Unfortunately, there are educators who, like Hollywood publicists, are guilty of over-working pet phrases—to the point where the public is almost sensitized to their meaning. Such a phrase is "educational crisis."

Today when world crises are almost as common as two-car families, Mr. and Mrs. America are hardly disturbed by the exhortations of bulging enrollments, teacher shortages, inflation, ad infinitum. And why should they be? You didn't have to be a history major to know that education has always had crises to face. Take private higher education for example. Money has never been in surplus. A little historical research confirms the scarcity of it when Jason Lee was at work. Or the problems of teachers. Every level of education has always been in search for outstanding people. Why then suddenly (comparatively speaking) is every college discussing the "educational crisis?" Does it really exist?

The answer has to be an emphatic yes. There is no inaccuracy to refer to the very real problems of faculty salaries, student enrollment, higher operating costs which face Willamette and other private colleges throughout the land as part of the "educational crisis." But a greater crisis will arise with a vengeance when the "trained intelligence" of these institutions fail to support them.

Philosopher Alfred North Whitehead points to the seriousness of such a consequence when he said in 1929: "In the conditions of modern life the rule is absolute, the race which does not value trained intelligence is doomed. Not all your heroism, not all your social charm, not all your wit, not all your victories on land or at sea, can turn back the finger of fate."

The colleges in America must not fail to effectively tell this story of the "financial crises." We in your alumni office accept the challenge which it gives. On the other side of the street it is for each of you former students to help decide the value to be placed on the "trained intelligence" to which Philosopher Whitehead refers.

OUTSTANDING ALUMS TO BE HONORED

A major project of the Willamette Alumni Association this year has been to inaugurate a program to honor outstanding alumni with a limited number of citation awards each year. These citations would be awarded to selected alumni in recognition of outstanding achievements and services which reflect honor upon Willamette University.

The spirit of the program insists that "... neither national, regional fame nor financial generosity shall be the sole considerations, and thus possibly preclude the honoring of an unknown alumnus whose influence and accomplishments personify the best in American citizenry and Christian character."

Any former student of Willamette University who has had a written recommendation submitted to the Director of Alumni Affairs is eligible for consideration of this award, except those alumni who are present members of the Board of Trustees, officers of the Alumni Association and of the faculty, as well as holders of honorary degrees from Willamette University. All written recommendations received by the Alumni Director will be referred to a committee of six persons. This committee will be composed of three faculty members and three Willamette alumni who will select no more than five alumni for citations in a single year.

The first presentation of the citations will be made on Founders' and Benefactors' Day in 1958 by the president of the university.

All alumni are urged to send in the name and qualifications of any person whom they feel deserves consideration. Please address correspondence to the Director of Alumni Affairs, Willamette University.

ALUMNI IN THE NEWS

HATFIELD SWORN IN

Mark Hatfield, '43, was sworn in January 7 as Oregon's 26th secretary of state. Probably the youngest man ever to hold the office, 34-year old Hatfield was former Dean of Students and Associate Professor of Political Science at Willamette. Mr. Warne Nunn, '41, (left) has been named assistant secretary of state. Supreme Court Justice William M. McAllister, '28, (right) performed the swearing in ceremonies.

Alum On Greek New Testament Project

Dr. Howard Teeple, '38, is a part of the expert staff at Emory University in Georgia at work on the "International Greek New Testament Project."

No medieval monk, copying the Scriptures in his cell, faced a task so painstaking as this monumental project that these members face. What the members of the International Greek New Testament Project have set out to do is to examine, word for word, all the relevant manuscript evidence now available and to record every variation that occurs among them.

The first part of their work will be completed sometime in 1957, when the Oxford press will publish the Project's edition of the Gospel of Luke. Other books will follow, and the entire job will be done, it is roughly estimated, within the next fifteen years. The completed work will cover eight full volumes and should endure as a comprehensive and reliable tool of research for scholars for the next century or more. It will supplant the last reliable such edition, written by Constantine von Tischendorf in 1869.

A logical result should be a better English translation of the New Testament.

Books of Poetry Available Soon

Theodore Hale ("Ted") Parker, class of '34, was one of the promising young poets of his generation. As early as his thirteenth year, he wrote poems that were good in form and not without insights. While in high school, at Toledo, Ohio, he was represented in a national anthology of high school poetry. As a member of Professor Richards' class in freshman English, he drew instant attention as a gifted writer.

Mr. Parker died in the fall of 1932, from a streptococcal infection. By that time he had written several hundred poems, some fifty or more of which were of mature worth. These have now been edited by Kenneth Oliver (also of the class of '34, and now chairman of the department of English and Comparative Literature at Occidental College in Los Angeles). The book, THE ROAD AND THE STARS, is being published by the WINGS press, and will be available soon. The Willamette University bookstore will be supplied with copies.

Willamette in 1938 and received his PhD from the University of Chicago in 1955. Dr. Teeple and his wife live at 1303 Clairmont Circle, Decatur, Ga.

Alum Heads Research

Dr. Paul G. Carpenter, '35, has been named director of research development for the Copolymer Rubber and Chemical Corporation of Baton Rouge, La.

Dr. Carpenter earned a master's degree from Oregon State College in 1937 and a Ph.D. degree from the University of Wisconsin in 1941.

Carpenter formerly was manager of the synthetic rubber branch, research and development department of the Phillips Petroleum Co. Until 1947 he was associated with the Hercules Powder Co., as a research chemist and research supervisor.

Dr. Carpenter and his wife, the former Janice Higgins, are natives of Salem, Ore. Mrs. Carpenter and their two children, Patricia and Charles, were to join Dr. Carpenter in Baton Rouge in January.

RANDALL B. KESTER NAMED TO HIGH COURT

Justice R. B. Kester, '37

Randall B. Kester, '37, was appointed by Governor Smith as associate justice of the Oregon supreme court.

The justice has been a partner in the Portland firm of Maguire, Shields, Morrison, and Bailey since 1940 and has been an active member of the Oregon bar in general practice and trial work. Kester is just completing a term as president of the Multnomah Bar association.

Kester graduated from Willamette university in 1937, and from Columbia university law school in 1940.

Gov. Smith praised his qualifications and expressed his pleasure at his acceptance of the appointment.

Justice Kester and his wife, Rachael (Woodhouse), have three daughters.

35th ANNUAL HOMECOMING

Sunny skies welcomed alumni returning to the Willamette University campus for the annual homecoming festivities, Nov. 2. The weather was perfect—warm enough to hold the barbecue luncheon out on the campus in front of the gymnasium. A colorful sight to see the alumni eating their lunch in the sun with the beautiful autumn foliage on the trees in the background—and bright, gold mums pinned to the suits and coats of the women.

There was much reminiscing over the coffee cups and greetings for those meeting for the first time in several years.

After lunch, it was on to the game, an exciting, if not successful, football game. The CPS and Willamette bands participating in the opening and halftime ceremonies . . . the cheer leaders and Willamette Pepcats also adding much color to the game. Sitting with President and Mrs. G. Herbert Smith in their box were President R. Franklin Thompson of College of Puget Sound and Mrs. Thompson. Dr. Thompson was formerly vice-president of Willamette . . . both enjoyed seeing their University friends again.

The Homecoming hostess, petite, brunette Jennine Graber, welcomed the alums at halftime.

Post game festivities included a coffee klatch at Doney Hall and a reception given by Dean and Mrs. Seward Reese at their home, honoring all Willamette Law school alumni and their wives, who were attending law alumni day at Willamette. In the past their reunion has always been held at commencement. Several hundred called to greet the guests of honor, Justice and Mrs. William McAllister.

The winners of the trophies for the Homecoming sign contest this year were announced at the dance. The Independent women and SAE fraternity walked off with the honors for their interpretation of the Bearcats Pound Puget Sound sign contest.

The senior bench, which disappeared mysteriously in 1951, was returned shortly before Homecoming to its place in front of Waller Hall. Deeply imbedded in concrete, it is now presumably un-snatchable. The bench, first stolen by the class of '55 when they were freshmen, was returned by the class of 1957 from its hiding place—a farmer's barn in South Salem.

Petite, charming Jeanine Graber, Salem, was Homecoming Hostess.

Convocation

Visitors to the campus for weekly convocations this semester included Douglas McKay and Sen. Wayne Morse; Ted Hallock, foreign correspondent and authority on Russia, and Mrs. Claire Argow, executive secretary of the Oregon Prison Association.

Teachers to Meet

The annual Willamette luncheon for teachers attending the Oregon Education Association meeting will be held Friday, March 15, at the Columbia Athletic Club in Portland. All alumni attending O.E.A. are invited.

Dr. James R. Lyles, who has succeeded Dr. George Martin in the education department at Willamette, will be introduced.

No reservations will be needed; tickets may be purchased at the door.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE IV Officers

Section I

The officers of the Association shall consist of a President, Vice-President, Secretary-Treasurer and Director of Alumni Affairs. These officers shall comprise the Executive Committee of the Association and said committee will be responsible to the alumni directors hereafter defined.

In each even-numbered year the President, Vice-President and Secretary-Treasurer shall be elected for a term of two years, and serve until their successors are elected and qualified.

The Directors of the Association shall consist of the immediate past president, the six members of the Board of Trustees of the University elected by the Association, and three alumni elected at large. Each year one director at large shall be elected for a term of three years and shall serve until a successor is elected and qualified.

Each year two members shall be elected to the Board of Trustees of Willamette University, each to serve for a term of three years or until a successor shall be elected and qualified. Should a vacancy occur at any time among the members of the Board of Trustees elected by the Alumni Association, it shall be filled at the next regular election of the Association.

Van Dyke Elected

Frank J. Van Dyke, of Medford, Ore., was elected vice-president of the Oregon State Bar Association recently. Van Dyke, an ex-speaker of the house of representatives, was a member of the state board of higher education for two years. He served in the legislature four terms. He has been a member of the board of governors since 1954, representing lawyers from the fourth congressional district.

Coming: Alumni Day

Saturday, June 1, is the official day for alumni to return to school.

If your class year ends with number "7" or "2", you will have a special class reunion luncheon to celebrate your five-year class anniversary. Matthew Madallions will be given to members of the classes of 1932 and 1907 to honor their 25th and 50th year anniversaries.

You will be contacted later by a class representative; however, if you do not receive a class letter, be sure to contact the Alumni Office of one of your class officers. Every one of you will want to be here on campus to join in the festivities.

Circle June 1 as a date to keep with your Alma Mater.

Gus Moore, '34, serving at the barbecue. Mrs. Mary Wagner Thompson, '31, is looking on.

JOHN LEWIS WRAPS UP TEN YEARS

The passing of a decade as coach at Willamette University won't go unnoticed when popular John Lewis wraps up his basketball season in Salem March 2.

Lewis, whose basketball teams had a 140-111 record up to this year's conference schedule which opened on January 11, has directed two teams that have won championships, in 1950 and 1952, and two others with co-championships, 1949 and 1951. His baseball teams won titles in 1953 and 1955 and a share of the crown in 1950, plus two finishes in second and a tie for second.

His leadership has been emphasized by the selection of 10 players to all-conference teams in basketball and 14 others to baseball all-star first teams. A former basketball and baseball player at University of Oregon, he later became a professional baseball pitcher.

As athletic director the past five years, Coach Lewis has had the job of trying to keep expenditures within the budget—a task made difficult by the unpredictability of gate receipts, which some years support the sports and other years fall short. Conference rules permit offering 75 per cent of an athlete's tuition, plus whatever he can make in genuine work on or off the campus. Willamette does not have on-campus jobs, Lewis explains, and off-campus, part time jobs have been a problem this year.

Perhaps Lewis' outstanding teams were those of the 1949-52 seasons when he had the three Johnsons—brothers Jim and Bob, who graduated in 1949, and Ted Johnson, an unrelated sophomore. With Ted Johnson, in the co-championship of 1951 and championships of 1950 and 1952, were the sparkling Ted Loder, Doug Logue and Lou Scrivens, all-conference triplets. His giant center, Neil Causbie, still with this year's Bearcats, holds the school all-time record of 36 points in one game, breaking a mark set nearly three decades earlier.

At the time Lewis came to the campus in 1947 and until 1952, he also coached the backfield in football, as assistant to Jerry Lillie for two years and three years to Chester Stackhouse. His current staff consists of Ted Ogdahl, head football and track coach; and Jerry Long, assistant in football and basketball, and golf coach.

The Bearcat Scene

Football . . .

Two Willamette university football players rated selection to the first team Northwest conference all-stars the past season.

They were Chuck Koani, senior fullback from Hawaii, and Bill Long, junior center from Myrtle Point, Ore. In addition, Koani and Dale Greenlee, senior tackle from Salem, were named to the second team of the Associated Press Little All-Northwest selections. Vic Backlund, junior end from Bandon, received honorable mention in the same list along with Dale Shumway, freshman halfback from Prineville.

Greenlee also received honorable mention on the United Press Little All-Coast.

Coach Ted Ogdahl's Bearcats finished in second place in the conference despite being tied in their final two games with champion Linfield and Whitman.

John Lewis, Director of Athletics, Assistant Professor of Athletics and Basketball and Baseball Coach.

Basketball . . .

John Lewis' varsity hoopsters are looking good at the beginning of the season. The Bearcats have won 5, lost 3 of the pre-conference games. The team is faster than last year's squad and the fast-break style of offense is proving effective. Willamette's chances in the 1957 Northwest Conference basketball race are bright.

Senior forward Don Hoy of Newberg holds the individual scoring lead for the Bearcats so far, leading the center Neil Causbie by 11 points. Causbie is leading the team in rebounds, with Hoy holding second place. Hoy is the leading free thrower at this point. Ed Grossenbacher, the sparkling freshman from Milwaukie, Ron Taylor, and Vick Backlund, junior lettermen, have also looked good in early season games.

Grossenbacher was named to the first team of All-Stars in the recent Far West Invitational Tournament at Reno, Nev., and Don Hoy to the second team.

Economic Aspect

Much has been said and written concerning the economic aspect. It is the economic incentive which sends a business enterprise in search of scientific talent, and in many cases, the increasing interest in the liberal arts student appears to be inspired by economic pressures. Better perhaps that the interest develop for this reason than not to develop at all. The economic arguments seem to be more readily accepted by business, but we might express here the hope that other fundamental reasons may be found and accepted by business men and educators.

As evidence of acceptance of the economic arguments in favor of liberal arts training, I might quote some of the stronger statements which have been made by representatives of business. For example, Frederic E. Pamp, Jr. of the American Management Association writes: "On one point all authorities have agreed. Narrow specialization is not enough; this is already responsible for most of the inability of middle management executives to be considered for promotion." This situation certainly results in an economic loss both to the enterprise and the individuals concerned. From another point of view, Clarence Randall, President of Inland Steel, writes: "The weakness of technical education as a preparation for a business career . . . when it is not balanced by participation in liberal disciplines, is that it leaves in the mind of the student the impression that all problems are quantitative and that a solution will appear as soon as all the facts have been collected and the correct mathematical formula evolved. Would life were that simple! Unhappily, the mysteries of human behavior from which come out most complex modern problems do not lend themselves to quantitative analysis, and there is no mental slide rule which can be distributed as a substitute for straight thinking."

John L. McGaffrey, President of International Harvester Company, has described the possible adverse influence of overspecialization on the economic advancement of the individual as follows: ". . . the world of the specialist is a narrow one and it tends to produce narrow human beings. The specialist usually does not see over-all effects on the business and so he tends to judge good and evil, right and wrong, by the sole standard of his own specialty.

"This narrowness of view, this judgment of all events by the peculiar standards of his own specialty, is the curse of the specialist from the standpoint of top management consideration for advancement. Except in unusual cases, it tends to put a road-block ahead of him after he reaches a certain level."

The change in attitude concerning the value of the liberal arts was noted in an article printed in BUSINESS WEEK. This article stated: "The times when company personnel directors would shy away from liberal arts graduates seems to be waning. They used to be afraid of the aura of indecision that often surrounds the liberal arts man. Big companies . . . and to some extent, smaller companies also, are taking a second look at the liberal arts man. They're beginning to view him as one of the best sources for top management positions. They want him on the payroll precisely because he's not a specialist. Job placement officers at campuses across the country spot this as a growing trend." Again here, the basic pressures behind the change in attitude are economic in nature.

Non-Economic Values

Much less has been written and said concerning the non-economic aspects of this subject. Are there other values worth considering, either to industry or to the individual?

In discussing this question with others, I find a growing belief that the economic values, important as they are to all of us, are no more important than those non-material values upon which we depend for the survival of a civilized society.

In an article primarily directed toward the economic side of the question, David A. Shepard, a director of Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, states the case for the study of the liberal arts as follows: "Our corporate industrial units require such wisdom quite as much as they do their technology and science. Without it they run the risk of putting the job before the man, the product ahead of the consumer. This kind of distortion could lead to one of the worst of industrial inefficiencies—the failure properly to relate the work of a business organization to the framework of the society it exists to serve."

Here the distinction is made between the customer and the framework of the society which includes that customer. This distinction is important, and in suggesting that representatives of industry and education join in recognizing the value of the liberal arts, I would emphatically recommend to both business men and educators that this distinction not be forgotten.

Our first incentive toward action may be economic in nature, but I would sincerely hope that we do not let this be our only incentive. Representatives of business and education in ever increasing numbers are beginning to sense the economic value of training in the liberal arts. Many of these people feel that other values of equal importance should be considered. As a result of this growing feeling, the first collective step toward a better understanding of the mutual interests of business enterprises and the Liberal Arts Colleges has been taken in the form of conferences, such as those sponsored by the College English Association, beginning in 1952.

By means of these and similar conferences, we may achieve a better understanding of our common problems and interests. With this understanding we can plan effective action to emphasize and support a broad liberal education program so necessary if our extensive efforts in the direction of scientific education are to be kept in balance.

ALUMS AT STATE BAR CONVENTION

The Humanities And Industry

study of literature, philosophy, and art, stressing creativity, awareness of basic meanings, and scales of value, does provide a sound background for business leadership. The chief qualities needed in executives and managers, he believes, are breadth of human experience, soundness of judgment, ingenuity, imagination, and vision. These qualities, he insists, are the results of a humane, liberal education, not of technical specialization. The executive must be prepared to work with human dynamics. "Without some awareness of the possibilities for meaning in human life, he is not equipped for this central job of managing people. That awareness is a direct function of the humanities." Dr. Pamp concludes his article by emphasizing that the essence of the humanities is awareness of meaning and the ability to make value judgments on all levels. The humanities oblige students to see situations as a whole and analyze them with all the elements of experience, physical, moral, intellectual, social, and spiritual. "The humanities in the colleges," he declares, "are now struggling to put the pieces of the specialties back together again in order to make the integrated men that management can best use."

Two-Point Program

If all this be true, and I am convinced that it is, what can we in the Northwest, and at Willamette University in particular, do to express our genuine concern? I have two concrete suggestions to make. First, we could organize here a systematic approach to the task of interesting Western and especially Northwest business and industry in conducting a systematic annual search for exceptionally endowed graduates in the humanities. We are all acquainted with the annual "campus search" conducted by business and industry for exceptional student talent in the fields of science and economics. Representatives of business and industry literally "line up" to interview students majoring in such fields. But why should students of exceptional talent in the humanities be neglected and obliged to resort to the long, slow, often devious routes which eventually may lead to placement and advancement?

The need is acute—the need to encourage students of high ability in the humanities to enter careers for which their humanistic training eminently prepares them. Such careers include not only college and university teaching, but also, for example, editorial work in the book and magazine publishing fields where graduates in the humanities might be "apprenticed" as junior readers, junior editors, or junior staff assistants with trade and industrial journals. In the same apprentice capacities they could be appointed to assistant positions in radio, television, and motion picture script writing, programing, and production. In fact, if the thesis advanced so cogently above by Mr. Shepard and Dr. Pamp be true, the personnel representatives of ALL the leading businesses and industries of the West Coast might well institute the same kind of systematic and assiduous search for "apprentices" trained in the humanities which is current practice today in the recruitment of student talent in science and economics.

This kind of program is already being successfully pursued in the East. Why not in the West? At Willamette University what agencies would be better set up to accomplish this purpose than the Advancement Program directed by Jerry Whipple and the Admissions Office directed by Charles Paeth, aided by the divisional chairman of Willamette's Division of Humanities and heads of departments in the humanities? The University's Financial Vice President Richard P. Petrie is excellently prepared by training and experience to advise such a program here. At Monmouth College in Illinois Mr. Petrie was one of those chiefly instrumental in initiating such an annual talent search among the leading industries of the Illinois Valley. Fifty or more Monmouth seniors were thus sought and employed annually. In their many contacts with key individuals in communities, large businesses, and industries these Willamette University agencies could invite and urge representatives of Western business and industry to visit our campus annually in search of talented graduates in the humanities.

Co-Sponsorship by Industry

My second suggestion is that Willamette University might well inaugurate on the West Coast, and especially here in the Northwest, periodic conferences on The Humanities and Industry to be sponsored jointly by Willamette University and certain of our leading industries. To further the rapport between business and the humanities such conferences have been successfully and rewardingly conducted in the East during the past five years under such joint sponsorship as the following: The College English Association and Corning Glass; Michigan State College and Oldsmobile; Union College and General Electric. Of such mutual efforts Dr. Pamp writes in the HARVARD BUSINESS REVIEW, "Action has been taken to bring educators together to discuss the desirable objectives of education for management. A new respect is developing on the part of businessmen for the standards which the privately endowed, liberal arts colleges have been defending for years."

Such a Northwest Conference on Humanities and Industry might well be held on our campus or on the business location of the co-sponsoring industry. Program speakers would be industrial executives and college administrators and humanities professors. Beginning modestly, such a conference would be numerically small, invitational, and highly selective in membership, practical in utilization of small seminar and panel discussion techniques,

POLIO SHOTS GIVEN

Lowell Fox, senior student, eyes the hypodermic held by Henrietta Althoff, Willamette health service nurse, during polio vaccine inoculations.

Salk polio vaccine was made available to Willamette students and faculty at the price of $1.00 a shot in a mass inoculation program. The first shot, together with a booster injection, were available at the low price because of the University's status as a non-profit organization.

and, if possible, keyed by a resource speaker of national distinction in industry or the humanities. Willamette would not have to go outside her own alumni to find men and women of such distinction. A few among the many Willamette alumni eminently qualified are the following: Ken McCormick, Editor-in-Chief of Doubleday and Company; Edward C. Wells, Vice President of Engineering, Boeing Airplane Company; Gerald Pearson and Daryl Chapin, Bell Telephone Research Physicists, co-inventors of the solar battery; William A. Mosher, Member of the Advisory Board of the Publications of the American Chemical Society; George H. Atkinson, President of the Guy F. Atkinson Company of San Francisco; Tyrone Gillespie, Assistant to the President of Dow Chemical Company and Director of the European subsidiary of Dow in Rotterdam; William Smullin, President of Smullin Television Stations; C. Gilbert Wrenn, Past President of the American College Personnel Association; Margaret Lewis Hathaway, Secretary of the International Y.W.C.A. for the District of South Africa, Johannesburg; and Tracy E. Strevey, Dean of the College of Letters, Arts, and Sciences, University of Southern California.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize that all of us need the humanities, whether we are in the academic world or the world of business and industry. The humanities are vital to our American culture and to our role in world society. If we are to discharge our heavy international responsibilities, we shall do so by virtue of the wisdom, inspiration, and strength which the humanities generate and preserve.

Willamette University Offers French Study Tour

Mr. Henry Cooper, Graduate Assistant in the Language Department, will conduct a French Study Tour next summer in cooperation with SITA (Student International Travel Association). This is the eighth in the series of tours and will include four weeks of study at the University of Grenoble. Courses at elementary, intermediate and advanced levels are available. Two to four semester-hours of credit may be earned during the session. The students will have an opportunity to live with French families. Departure will be June 17th from Montreal on the steamer Grootte Beer.

The University sponsors a number of excursions and weekend trips in addition to the study program. When the study course is completed, optional extensions of the tour in Western Europe may be added.

Mr. Cooper graduated from WU in 1950, having majored in French, and spent the following school year in a French secondary school as an English Language Assistant. After four years in the military service, he returned to Europe and spent a year in the University of Paris under the Middlebury College School of French in France program. He received his MA from Middlebury in August, 1956. During his stay in Paris he married Paulette Simonet, whose family is well known to numerous Willamette professors and students who have visited Paris. She will accompany her husband as far as Paris, where she will visit her parents while Mr. Cooper is in Grenoble.

The cost of the tour will be $765.00. The extension tour, which will include Belgium, Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Italy and France, will cost $1120.00. These costs include room, board, tuition, and all transportation from Montreal.

Schlesinger State Senator

Sidney Schlesinger, '40, Salem businessman, was appointed as the new Marion county state senator by the county court in December.

Schlesinger, a past chairman of the Marion county Republican central committee, will replace Mark Hatfield who resigned when elected to the office of Secretary of State.

Chapin and Pearson Make TV Debut

Two scientists, Daryl Chapin, '27, and Gerald Pearson, '26, appeared Nov. 19 over a national television program entitled "Our Mr. Sun" sponsored by Bell Telephone.

It was an hour-long color program that told the story of the sun from its worship by ancient man to its use by modern man and described man's efforts to harness sun power and convert it into energy. The Bell Solar Battery, on which the two scientists worked, was shown in part of the program.

Both of the scientists are with the Bell Telephone Company Research Laboratories in New Jersey.

Quiring in Senate Post

Leandor Quiring, '36, was appointed in December to fill a vacancy as state senator from Umatilla county in Oregon. Mr. Quiring lives in Hermiston, Ore., where he has been active in business for 17 years. Currently he is in the contracting and real estate business. His daughter, Sylvia, is a freshman at Willamette.

Students Make TV Debut

Television reached the local scene in December when Portland's channel 12, KLOR, requested a student talent appearance on their Studio West program. Featured were Tom Caylor, ballad singer, Ted Primrose and Jean Galbraith in a modern dance, and the Sigma Chi eight-man quartet.

Dr. Strevey On Tour

Dr. Tracy E. Strevey, '23, Dean of the College of Letters, Arts, and Sciences at Southern California, and a noted American historian, left Dec. 26 for India on a six weeks' lecture tour for the U. S. Department of State.

He was appointed a member of the National Historical Publications Commission last year by President Eisenhower. During the four-year appointment by the President, Dr. Strevey will assist in advising Federal authorities on the historical documents and materials.

During the tour he will speak at universities throughout India, confer with groups of students and faculty members, and also lecture to international Kiwanis and Rotary clubs in the larger cities. Although he has traveled widely in Russia, Europe and Central America, this will be his first visit to India.

His lectures will cover a wide range of subject: from American higher education to American historical development. He earned his MA in history from the University of Washington in 1925, and PhD in history from the University of Chicago in 1930. He was given the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws by Willamette in 1951.

Dr. Strevey and his wife, Margaret, and two children, live at 3620 Homeway Drive in Los Angeles.

CLASS NOTES

In Memoriam

Dr. Grover C. Bellinger, '09, husband of Hattie C. Beckley, '11, died in November in Salem, Ore. Dr. Bellinger was superintendent of the Oregon State Tuberculosis hospital from July, 1913, until his retirement in June, 1954. He was widely known for his long and active fight against tuberculosis. A native Oregonian, Dr. Bellinger was graduated from the school of pharmacy at Willamette in 1903 and as a pharmacist worked his way through the University of Oregon medical school, graduating in 1908. He continued his studies in medicine as a post graduate student at the Harvard medical school.

Dr. Bellinger held memberships and offices for several years in the Oregon TB and Health association, the National Tuberculosis association, the American Trudeau society, Marion county medical society, Oregon state medical society and American Medical Association. A member of the American College of Chest Physicians since 1935 and an honorary member since 1952, Dr. Bellinger had served as area consultant in tuberculosis for the veterans administration since 1946. He was a member of the Methodist church and of the Masonic lodge.

Survivors include his wife; a daughter, Mrs. A. T. King, Salem, Ore.; a son, Grover L. Bellinger, '36, Salem, Ore.; a brother, Clifford Bellinger, Salem; a sister, Mrs. Edith B. Skeen, Gig Harbor, Wash.; and seven grandchildren.

ELEANOR TRINDLE, x-'37, died Dec. 20 in Salem. She had been ill for the past six months. Miss Trindle graduated from OSC and received her master's degree in education from the Teachers College at Columbia University. Miss Trindle was well known as a teacher and home economist. An associate professor at Oregon State College at the time of her death. Miss Trindle had served with the Federal Cooperative Extension Service at OSC since the fall of 1950.

Willamette University
Salem, Oregon

A DISTINGUISHED MISSION

WILLAMETTE FACES highly competitive conditions today — competition for qualified teachers, for the best of youth, for the essential tools. Shall Willamette continue to render the distinguished service long associated with her name? There can be only one answer.

AS STUDENTS, we thought it to be a great thing to be at Willamette. And surely, for most of us, that feeling has taken on a deeper meaning as we have grown to realize better the fundamental value of a Willamette education in the society of today.

TO WHOM then can Willamette turn better than to us — the thousands whom she helped train, develop, mold — for much-needed support in her great continuing mission of serving the youth of today?

SO WILLAMETTE turns to you, me, and her former students everywhere — with the confidence that we will be proud and happy to give to the Loyalty Fund in support of Willamette's distinguished mission.

Alumni Gifts Compared to Ford Grant

The support from Willamette's alumni is the foundation for the university's growth. Your interest and giving are essential in the continued building of a strong, adequate program of higher education.

To assure the continuance of an outstanding faculty the board of trustees last spring inaugurated a two-year program for salary increases. The success of this vital program is very much dependent upon the response of the university's friends.

I have read with interest the mid-year report of alumni giving. The importance of your gifts can best be expressed by recalling to you the generous gift from the Ford Foundation of which we have received $125,000 to date. This is designated for faculty salaries and we are permitted only to use the interest earned (approximately $4530 annually).

Through the multiplicity of givers, the annual gifts of alumni are doing the work equivalent to this invested $125,000. To each of you who will make a gift to this year's Loyalty Fund I express the appreciation of your alma mater.

G. HERBERT SMITH
President, Willamette University

Association President Speaks

It is most gratifying to note the excellent response for the first six months of this year's Loyalty Fund. 8% of Willamette's former students have given over $3500. If an additional 12% (20% is the average for all colleges in the U.S.) were to join us in the next six months with their $1, $2, $5, $10, $25 we would nearly double the money earned this year from the Ford gift.

It seems so reasonable and possible. If you haven't, won't you help to make it so?

M. E. "GUS" MOORE
President, Willamette Alumni Association

* Does not include alumni gifts to Challenge Fund. These will be given in final report, June 30, 1957.
