AN INTERNATIONAL GOOD WILL DAY

HUGH BELL

"World brotherhood is ready to break into the world when you are ready to let it break into your heart," said John R. Mott at the recent Student Volunteer Convention at Indianapolis. Today we have many organizations such as the church, Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., fraternal orders, and other social groups organized for the express purpose of promoting good will and brotherhood among men, and yet we find that altogether too often these groups include only a certain class in their membership. They are limiting in their scope. They take in only those who think as they do, dress as they do, or those who are willing to conform to their particular way of thinking and acting. We find this same spirit extended until it takes in the Nation. Here it stops and we have extreme nationalism, the enemy of all progress both individual and social. The need of the world at the present time is for men and women who are willing to extend their understanding and sentiments so as to include all nations and races of the world.

Looking out over the world today we see discontent and unrest on every hand. Race, religion, nationalism, and economic exploitation are forces at work in every country tending to keep men divided and making it impossible for good will to exist between men. We hear much about social service programs and international courts of justice to outlaw war and preserve peace, but we will never have a new social order, we will never have permanent peace until we have men and women in whom the spirit of good will lives and reigns supreme.

Then the question comes to us, what can we do as students on this campus to promote a spirit of good will in the world? The first thing that we can do is to get an understanding and appreciation of the industrial economic, and international problems that are confronting the world at present time. The indifference of the average student and faculty member of this school in regard to these vital questions that are confronting the world at present time is alarming. No matter what field of endeavor a student is planning to enter after graduation he will find that his social relationships is one of the most important aspects of his vocation, hence a knowledge of the social problems is imperative. As an illustration of the indifference of students to these vital problems we can cite the instance of the speaker who was recently brought to the campus, considered to be one of the greatest authorities on international problems, and twenty-five students turned out to hear him, free of charges, and four hundred and seventy-five spent from thirty-five to fifty cents on some picture show or other equally valueless trifling on the same evening. Then in the second place we can see to it that all organizations to which we belong, whether fraternity, society, Y.M. or Y.W., maintain and encourage a spirit of good will to all students on the campus. Unless we can have the spirit of good will to all students in the groups with which we are connected here at Willamette it is hardly possible that we will be able to extend our understanding and sympathy to include all nations and races of the world.

Gale Seaman has said that whenever you treat a man outside your fraternity with a different brand of brotherhood than you treat the man in your house your fraternity has failed. For the fraternity was organized for the express purpose of promoting the spirit of brotherhood, and a true spirit of brotherhood cannot be contained within the walls of any fraternity, or sorority or even a church. And in the third place we can make every effort to see to it that a spirit of good will to all men is an actuating force in our everyday lives. This is most important for out of the heart of man proceeds those spiritual forces that rule the very destiny of mankind. It is of vital importance that we as individuals have this spirit of brotherhood in our own hearts and lives for without it living and moving in our own lives it is impossible for us to extend it to others. We cannot hope to create in others that which we do not possess ourselves. We cannot export something that we have not. And two thousand years of experience has taught the world that there is only one true source of this spirit of universal good will and brotherhood and that is Jesus Christ. If every student on this campus, and every citizen of the world, would come to Him and receive His blessing of understanding and love for all men, the problems of this campus, and the industrial, and economic, and

BEARCATS BEATEN BY OREGON & P. U.

The Willamette University baseball squad met two defeats in the two games played away from home last week. The University of Oregon took in the Bearcats by the score of 13-2 in the game played at Eugene and the Pacific aggregation sprung a decided surprise when they defeated the Bearcats by the score of 5-2 in a hard fought game played there. Robertson pitched the first inning against Oregon and was relieved by Ellis who finished the game. Ellis' pitching against Oregon was very effective as he played on the same team in high school with the Oregon batting stars and knew their batting weaknesses. The infield played a good game against Oregon although it was not the air tight band of ball that they displayed in previous games this year. Inham, veteran third baseman, played his usual consistent game with the exception of one bad throw to first and was one of the Bearcats' strong points in defense. Hard luck and several errors contributed to the defeat at Forest Grove although the men played good ball for the most part there were very ragged spots in their game which let in runs at the critical points. The Willamette batters were unable to solve Mace's delivery to any great extent and were consequently unable to make the necessary scores to break even after the ragged work in the field. The next game for the Bearcats will be with the College of Puget Sound here Friday afternoon and the squad will close their season with the College of Seattle here three days later.

Mrs. Kells Exhibits Woodland Scene

Another picture is on exhibit in the University library. It was painted by Mrs. C. A. Kells and is a woodland scene typical of those often found on the banks of a slow moving Western Oregon river. The woodland in the foreground is open and parklike. Grass covers the ground and here and there masses of last year's autumn leaves remain in the sheltered hollows. The trees are evidently ash or mountain laurel. They are growing on the banks of a placid creek, and other trees across the streams, are hazy in the background. The sky shades from a mottled blue to a peculiar cream color. This is the third of a series of nature paintings which have been exhibited in the library this year. This picture is loaned by the painter, Mrs. Kells.

David Starr Jordan, President Emeritus of Stanford University recently set forth what he considers the requisites of an ideal lecture: "A college lecture should not be considered as a form of entertainment, though it may often be so; its purpose is either to impart new ideas or inspiration." Too many lecturers try to be merely amusing, and they are encouraged in this course by the following of those students who want to be entertained, not taught or inspired. The prime use of a University is to teach students to think for themselves; this end is partially defeated by the gigantism of most modern universities, where individualism is stamped out and all the students become one pattern.

Compulsory military drill is a question that worries students on the Pacific as well as the Atlantic coast. On May 17, a debate on the subject is to be held in the Seattle Labor Temple under the auspices of the Seattle Labor College. The subject is worded, "Resolved: that compulsory military drill should be abolished in the University of Washington." During the last few months the campus of the University has been stirred by a violent controversy on the subject. Many letters, pro and con, have appeared in The University of Washington Daily. Persistent and continued efforts to have compulsory drill abolished have been made ever since 1909. Several times groups of students travelled to the state capitol at Olympia to petition the legislators. At different times students have been suspended from the University for active opposition to military drill.

Gale Seaman Speaks at Good-Will Chapel

Gilbert Wrenn opened the International Good Will chapel, sponsored by the YMCA and YWCA, with devotion, reading and original paraphrase of the Lord's command to Peter to rise up and fight the heathen, saying instead: "There are all manner of men about you, therefore rise up and associate with them." Mr. Wrenn then introduced Professor Hardie, who traced the stages of the development of good will in international law. This account from the standpoint of history and politics showed what progress has really been made during the period of civilization toward frank and warm-hearted dealings between nations. As a very fitting climax to the exercises, Gale Seaman was present to speak during the attendance at both the men's and women's summer conference at Seabeck. He outlined the advantages of studying such topics as good will at Seabeck. Gale Seaman is perhaps one of the best-known of the YMCA workers; his appearance on college platforms is eagerly watched.

Waite Fountain Plays as Final Number of May Day

One of the most attractive features of Junior Week-end was the fountain display in Willson park. The display consisted of various spray formations in varying and harmonious colors. Mr. Albert Warren played two cornet solos, one of which was "I Love You Truly" by Bond. The Roguish Umps entertained in following with several numbers. TIT-TO-TAT

Evil is to him who moral thinks. Laugh and the world laughs with you. Frown and become a famous play-wright. If at first you don't succeed, quit trying and do something else.

One of the prerequisites of a philosopher is absence of a sense of humor. The real secret of success is to throw into the ash-can every one else's secret of success. The bigger loafer a man is, the more time he has on this earth. Convention is the invention of the older generation to keep the younger generation from spurning too far in advance of it. The theory of evolution at Southwestern college is being backed by the board of trustees as well as the faculty of the college.
