Students Prepare for Intercollegiate Ski Meet

Willamette students are eagerly anticipating participation in the seventh annual Intercollegiate Winter Carnival scheduled for February 22 through 24 at Bachelor Butte. Portland State, the hosting college, anticipates the attendance of nearly 2,000 from 26 Northwest colleges at the West's biggest collegiate ski holiday.

Students will be housed in Bend, where they will find free ice skating facilities, bus transportation to the ski slopes, and professional entertainment. The Willamette ski team hopes to better last year's record of 7th place out of a field of 16 teams in the downhill and slalom races, and also has high hopes in the powder puff races for girls. The Carnival entertainment highlight will be the appearance of the Four Freshmen, a collegiate entertainment group.

Willamette Snow Princess Paula Abbott, a junior from Kailua, Hawaii, will be Willamette's 1963 entrant in the Snow Queen contest. Housing arrangements, ticket sales and publicity are being managed by Nan Means, a junior, and Fred Ihlenberg, a senior, Willamette's official representatives to the Carnival.

Willamette students are fortunate to find themselves within a few hours scenic drive of any of six famous ski bowls offering a challenge to novice and expert skiers alike.

With the growing national interest in the sport, the Willamette campus bristles with the skis and poles of enthusiastic students preparing to depart for a few hours of weekend skiing.

Mt. Hood, with its spectacular Timberline Lodge, attracts many students who, for the effort of a two hour drive, can enjoy internationally famous skiing followed by a dip in the outdoor heated pool. Multotorpor at Government Camp, Oregon, offers a new chair lift and many trails for varied individual skills. Hoodoo Bowl at Santiam Pass provides six rope tows as well as a 2700-foot chairlift to satisfy the skier's needs. For deep powder snow, the many trails of Bachelor Butte near Bend, Oregon, offer skiing at its best. Willamette Pass near Eugene also draws mutual competition from Willamette and other Oregon colleges. The White Pass Summit in Washington attracts the experts for its famous runs and ski-touring.

The ski-minded Willamette student body has reorganized the Willamette Ski Club. The officers include: president, Dale Sticka; vice-president, Sam Farr; secretary, Candy Coffelt; treasurer, Sharon Ellison; activities, Dave Powers; and publicity, Fred Ihlenberg. Activities will include an overnight ski trip and participation in the Winter Carnival.

The Ski Club meetings this year have been very well attended, with a membership of more than 100. The programs include ski movies, guest speakers, equipment clinics, snow reports, and instruction in safety on the slopes and ski techniques. The member-operated ski school has 18 enrolled students, who are increasing their knowledge and enjoyment of the sport on Saturdays on the slopes of Mt. Hood. The Salem Jaycee Ski School is expected to attract many more to its weekend sessions at Hoodoo Ski Bowl.

Waiting turns at the new Bachelor Butte double chairlift.

Lined up for the Poma Lift at Mt. Bachelor. The Cinder Cone, with its myriad of ski tracks, is in the background.

Coe Fellowships Offered

Under a grant from the Coe Foundation of New York, Willamette University will offer fellowships to selected high school teachers to attend a Summer Institute of American Studies.

The primary purpose of the Institute is to afford an opportunity for increased professional preparation for selected teachers, and to encourage a fuller understanding and appreciation of the American Heritage in the world today.

The Willamette University of American Studies plans to advance these objectives by offering an intensive and integrated re-examination of American political, economic and social ideals and institutions.

The course of instruction will deal with American ideas and ideals, political and economic institutions, and contemporary issues and policies as viewed within the context of the American Heritage. The Institute is a cooperative effort of the University Departments of History, Political Science and Economics.

The Coe Foundation was created for the purpose of "assisting Colleges and Universities to establish Summer Refresher Courses in American Studies for selected teachers and professors." In addition to the teacher program, the Foundation has provided permanent endowments in American Studies in several universities.

Applicants must be teaching American History, American Government, American Problems, or other appropriate social studies courses in high school at the time of their application.

Twenty-five resident fellowships will be awarded. Each grant will provide full tuition for six hours of graduate study. In addition, the grant will cover the cost of housing, meals, books and supplies. Each fellowship is valued at $400.

Those interested in further information of the program may write to Dr. Theodore Shay, head of Willamette's political science department.

Science Grants Announced

In addition to the Coe Foundation grant, Willamette University has received several other grants during the past two months.

The Esso Education Foundation of the Humble Oil and Refining Company gave to the University an unrestricted $2,000 grant. Dr. G. Herbert Smith said that the funds will be applied to the $200,000 the University is raising to finance the addition to Collins Hall. The science addition will provide facilities for expanded laboratories, classrooms and faculty offices.

Since 1941, when the original science building was constructed, the enrollment in that department of the university has doubled, Dr. Smith said.

The DuPont Company awarded Willamette a $5,000 grant which the University is to use "in the ways the University feels will be most effective in advancing its instruction in chemistry."

The grant was one of 168 awarded nationally to colleges and universities by the DuPont Company.

The program is intended to strengthen the teaching of science and related subjects, to aid fundamental research by universities, and to increase facilities for education or research in science and engineering.

The National Science Foundation has granted $16,800 to Willamette's chemistry and physics departments. The funds will be divided equally between the two departments.

The grant is to support a one-year program of undergraduate research in the departments. It will provide financial support to students for full-time summer research and part-time research during the academic year.

In the department of chemistry, Dr. Norman J. Hudak has been given a $9,000 research grant from the Petroleum Research Fund which is administered by the American Chemical Society.

The research will involve the synthesis of new organic compound and will be in progress for 39 months, beginning in June of this year.

Willamette Athletes Honored

Two Willamette University football players have received coastwide recognition for their contribution to the sport.

Tommy Lee, Bearcat quarterback from Hawaii, was named an All-Methodist Small College All-American, All-Coast Small College quarterback by the Associated Press, Northwest Conference first team quarterback and given honorable mention as a NAIA Small College All-American.

Tommy Lee

Willie Hartman

Willie Hartman, center from Portland, was named to the All-Northwest Conference first team, named to the United Press International's Little-All-Coast team, and also received honorable mention on the NAIA Small College All-American team.

Dr. Trueblood Publishes

A New York book publisher, Russell and Russell, has published a book by Dr. Paul G. Trueblood, head of the University's English department.

The volume, of which a copy is on reserve in the Willamette Library, is entitled, "The Flowering of Byron's Genius: Studies in Byron's Don Juan." Originally published by Stanford University Press and Oxford University Press, the book is the first monograph on Byron's masterpiece, Don Juan.

Dr. Trueblood, an internationally recognized Byron scholar, is now engaged in preparation of a book on Byron for Twayne's English Authors Series. He has been a Byron consultant to the University of Chicago Press, has published Byron reviews in the Keats-Shelley Journal and the Saturday Review, and is a member of the Keats-Shelley Association, a Fellow of the American Council of Learned Societies, and a Life Fellow of the International Institute of Arts and Letters.

Lawyer from Bombay

The first Indian student to attend the Willamette College of Law began classes in January. The 29-year-old student from Bombay, Shyamsunder Sakharan Rajadmyaksha, plans to spend one-and-one-half years in the study of law at Willamette having already received his LL.B degree from the New Law College of Bombay in 1957.

The purpose of his additional study here is to enrich his knowledge of common and public law as developed in the United States. Law School Dean Seward Reese commented that "we are happy to have this opportunity to make our influence felt in India."

Rajadmyaksha's wife, Nandini, is an instructor in science at Oregon State University. He will commute to classes from his residence in Corvallis.

Following the completion of his work here, Rajadmyaksha plans to return to India to practice law.

Founders' and Benefactors' Day

Honored this year were Founder Lafayette Grover and Benefactor Dr. Frank E. Brown. Senior Sue Bower of Coos Bay, a philosophy and political science major, eulogized Grover while Ron Ray, a senior from Forest Grove, eulogized Dr. Brown.

Grover, who was governor of Oregon from 1870 to 1876, came to Salem in 1851 to practice law and later became district attorney, US Attorney and a member of the state legislature. He was connected with the Willamette Woolen Manufacturing Company in Salem. He was also a member of the first board of trustees at Willamette University.

Dr. Brown was a 1898 graduate of Willamette and graduated from the University's School of Medicine in 1900. He started the first basketball team at Willamette while a student director of physical education and was a member of the board of trustees at Willamette for 23 years. He served on the board of directors of the Salem YMCA for 40 years and practiced medicine in Salem until his death in 1958.

The ceremonies also included the presentation of diplomas to fifteen students, and the honoring of five alumni, Dr. and Mrs. H. Leslie Frewing, M. E. "Gus" Moore, Rose Nelson, and Judge Arlie Walker, and the presentation of an award by the French Consul from Portland to language instructor Dr. Marion Morange.

Palmes Academiques

Dr. Marion Morange, '30, head of the Romance Language Department, was awarded the "Palmes Academiques" by the French Consul from Portland at January's annual Founders and Benefactors Day program.

The award is given to distinguished scholars who have taught French in the United States or who have aided in making the French language and culture known about the world, according to the French Consul, Alfred Herman, who presented the award.

"The award," according to Herman, "is equivalent to the granting of an honorary doctor's degree at an American university. It actually makes the recipient a knight of the Palmes Academiques, an intellectual order in France. Only five or six have been awarded in Oregon during the past 35 years."

The award is proposed by the French Consulu in San Francisco and was approved by the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Minister of National Education in Paris.

In making the presentation Mr. Herman said: "Every so often in my official capacity as Consul of France, I am called upon to perform a most pleasant duty, that is to recognize officially the untiring and devoted efforts on the part of American professors, dedicated to the propagation of the French language and culture. Today it is an honor for us to publicly acknowledge and thank Miss Marion Morange for her outstanding contribution in this field of human and intellectual endeavour. For many years, Miss Morange has not only taught the French language at Willamette University, but has been a brilliant exponent of French cultural life and accomplishments. She has done much more than to teach. She has made France known, understood and beloved by her many students. She has given them an insight and understanding of France. The French Government is very grateful to her.

Dr. Morange graduated from Willamette in 1930 and received her master's degree at Willamette the following year. Since that time she has been associated with the Foreign Language Department of the University and has headed the Romance Language Department for ten years.

She received her Ph.D degree from Middleburg College in Vermont in 1950 following a fellowship in France in 1946 and 1947 sponsored by the Oregon Division of the American Association of University Women.

Dr. Morange is honored by the French government as she receives award from French Consul Albert Herman.

Lafacadio Hearn's

By O. W. FROST

Associate Professor of English

The following article is reprinted with permission from TODAY'S JAPAN, a popular English-language magazine published in Tokyo.

Dr. O. W. Frost became acquainted with the writings of Lafcadio Hearn when in Japan in 1945-46. Upon his discharge from the U.S. Army, Frost entered the University of Illinois, from which he received B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees. Both a bachelor's thesis and Ph.D. dissertation concerned Lafcadio Hearn, and he was in fact awarded a Fulbright scholarship in 1952-53 to pursue this interest in European countries where Hearn was reared.

Since coming to Willamette in 1954, Frost has published two books on Hearn, a biography YOUNG HEARN (1958) and a collection of Hearn's stories about Negro roustabouts called CHILDREN OF THE LEVEE (1957). During 1959-60, he assisted Elizabeth Stevenson in the preparation of her LAFCIDIO HEARN (1961), a volume nominated for the National Book Award in 1962. In her "Acknowledgements," Miss Stevenson thanks Frost "for his interest and stimulation given a worker in a field in which he has done pioneer work."

Like most Willamette professors, Frost has taken part in organizational activities, helping to establish Willamette's Honors Program, acting as a judge in the National Council of Teachers of English Achievement Awards contest, being a college consultant in English for the Oregon Program of Advanced Placement, and serving as president of the Mid-Willamette Valley Association of Phi Beta Kappa. In the Salem community he has been president of the Salem Area Council of Churches and an elder of the Westminster Presbyterian Church. Tennis, golf, gardening, and playing with his three pre-school children are his chief pastimes.

During his years at Willamette, Frost has seen his brother David G. ('56) graduate from the College of Law and his youngest brother Allan R. ('64) enter a pre-med course in Collins Hall.

Lafcadio Hearn (1850-1904), whose books were all published in the United States, was himself never an American citizen. Born in Greece of Anglo-Greek parentage, he was reared in Ireland by a Roman Catholic great-aunt, educated at Jesuit schools in France and England, and cast adrift at 19 years in the United States. Here he became a newspaper reporter in Cincinnati and New Orleans, gradually receiving recognition for his translations of French literature and his stories of Creole and Negro life. Sent by Harpers to Japan in 1890, he remained there the rest of his life, marrying into a family of the old samurai class, becoming a naturalized Japanese citizen, and writing essays and stories about Japan's cultural heritage. Still widely revered in Japan today, Hearn is chiefly remembered for his interpretive essays on Japanese society.

The Japanese say: "Read Hearn if you would know us better"

Enchantment with Religion

AS LAFCADIO HEARN belonged to no one race, so he did not identify himself with any one religion. He believed that religions are the product of races; and, since no race in society is perfect, he concluded that no religion can be perfect. Certainly, he was not, as the critic John Huneker once charged, "a proselyte to a dozen creeds, from the black magic of Voodooism to Japanese Shintoism. What he admired in religions was beauty in their teachings and the simple beliefs of those who adhered to a popular faith. He had no scruples about paying for beauty which he enjoyed; he gladly made offerings to Siva, to Buddha, and to the Shinto deity at Kitzuki.

From the time that Hearn as a boy had emancipated himself from the Roman Catholicism of his great-aunt, Mrs. Justin Brenane, he did not seem in any way to be a hounded fugitive from Christianity. Yet his letters from Japan often give this impression. At times he imagined that he was spotted, that all Christendom was down on him, that "the great dead weight of orthodox opinion" had meant the propagation of lies about him, lies which were ruining his reputation, lies which made him appear preposterous as "a prostitute trying to become an honest woman" or villainous as an "atheist" and a "debauchee" who "was corrupting the morals of the young under pretence of teaching literature." He believed that Doshisha University, considered then "the chief citadel of Christianity in Central Japan," had sent a spy down to Kumamoto in order to discredit him before the world and to rob him of his means of livelihood. Such fears, prompted of course by the insecurity of his position as a foreign-born teacher under contract with a militant Japanese government, underline his distrust of the religion of his unhappy orphaned youth.

Hearn simply could not be unemotional about Christianity. His childhood had been too weighted with what he called "conventional wickedness and conventional dreariness and ugliness and dirty austerities and long faces and Jesuitry and infamous distortion of children's brains." The missionary effort, as he saw it in Japan, was an arm of Western imperialism, seeking to destroy Japan's rich religious heritage. He believed that the missionaries themselves were bigots who, putting terrible connotations upon the word idol, taught disrespect of Buddhism and Shinto. The missionaries were "destroyers" and "frauds" and "jackasses" who could "lie hard" and who subscribed to "an earnest belief in devils." (To some missionaries, he was—not surprisingly—"the moral plague-spot of Japan.") He seriously advocated the suppression of Christian missions in Japan and, by way of accomplishment, jokingly advanced the proposal that "missionaries ought to be put on a small ship, and the ship scuttled at a reasonable distance of one thousand miles from shore."

Defining Shinto as the soul of the Japanese race, Hearn loved the national individuality, its politeness, its smiles, its loyalty; one of his few disappointments was the indifference of his Japanese students to philosophy of a speculative nature. Although State Shinto was largely responsible for the neglect of Buddhist culture during Hearn's fourteen years in Japan (1890-1904), although State Shinto introduced Western technology, Western imperialism, Western militarism—almost everything Western except Christian missions—still, Hearn was not hostile to the Shinto revival. He declared to his students, "I think it is your highest social duty to honor your Emperor, to obey his laws, and to be ready to give your blood whenever he may require it of you for the sake of Japan." He loved Shinto as the instrument by which national patriotism had been aroused to strengthen Japan against Western aggression; he loved it as a bulwark that thwarted the efforts of Christian missionaries.

He approved of Shinto worship of ancestors, for the concept of kami forebears was consistent with what he understood about modern heredity. The Shinto belief that Japan and its people had their origin in the Sun Goddess was suggestive to him of scientific truth, for did not all life have its beginnings in the sun? That this ancestor worship, stressing the importance of having offspring to maintain the family shrines, fostered concubinage to perpetuate the shrines did not appear to detract from his enthusiasm for Shinto.

Where did life go? Hearn thought that he found better answers to this query in Buddhist books than in any others. Metempsychosis had appealed to him as early as 1880—the idea that the outer shells of all matter must perish, that the atoms of all beings are forever fashioned into shifting forms. Worlds would wither, for “worlds are but dreams of God, and evanescent.” Yet out of the desiccations, the dissipations, would be created new worlds, new resurrections of lives and new incarnations of gods. Essentially, then, there was no loss. Death was consoling for one who could comprehend the Eastern truth that all life is One, that all matter in the universe is destined to coalesce in a communion of eternal bliss. “In some new and wonderful way I found myself assured that there never could have been a beginning,—that there never could be an end.”

Hearn, however, did not want to believe with the Buddhist that only the soul-dust of creation was eternal; neither did he want to believe that existence on earth resulted from the corruption of the individual in a pre-existence. He wanted to believe that the grosser substance, the shapes of weird trees, the outlines of human bodies would also become etherealized. He was too much devoted to Greek aestheticism to wish otherwise.

Hearn directed his wife to buy a little urn when he died. “Put my bones in it,” he said, “and bury it near a quiet temple in the country.” He wanted to share the ghostly company of ancestors where the monstrous, cruel fashions of the world would be non-existent, where the “sudden, sibilant sobbing” of the Buddhist gong would make him aware of “sensations as of memories struggling to reach the light beyond the obscurations of a million deaths and births.” If he were so lacking in fortune that he would become a mosquito in his next existence, he would nevertheless be content to sing a continuous, whirring song and to bite some people he knew. But if bliss were fated for him, he would gladly join the congregation of the legendary Taoist Men of the Mountains, swimming “in the long gold bath of a sunbeam,” thrilling “in the heart of a flower,” riding “on the neck of a dragon-fly.” He would gladly reach the Buddhist Nirvana and command the moon to cease its “corpse-like circlings in the Night of Immensity” and to join him in “that darker immensity where even dreams are dead,” where over the holy silence of the lotus flower, immutable bliss and infinite knowledge prevail.

But these were mere fancies. Hearn could never really believe in any kind of supernaturalism. No religion had solved the enigma of life for him. “The mystery of life,” he declared, “remains the most inscrutable, the most tremendous, the most appalling of enigmas.”

Home Economics Offers Integrated Program

The Home Economics department at Willamette University now offers courses to both men and women students whatever may be their major field of study.

The reason for this, according to department head Miss Mildred Deischer, is that the program is now designed to focus on preparation for home and family living to meet the needs of both men and women, arising from the changing conditions of the home and in society.

In addition, there is a growing emphasis on interdepartmental cooperation which provides a background in the general field of knowledge concerned with strengthening family life. Cooperation between Home Economics and other departments such as sociology, psychology, fine arts, economics, physical education and science makes it possible to have combined classes, seminars, and an interchange of faculty and guest speakers.

Three new members of the Willamette University Home Economics Advisory Committee are pictured above meeting with two of the senior members of the ten member committee for an orientation discussion. The pictured members are, from left to right, Miss Mildred Deischer, associate professor of Home Economics; Dean Gregg, Dean of the Liberal Arts College; and the new members of the group, Mrs. Donna Williams, a Salem homemaker, Dr. LeRoy Anderson, assistant professor of sociology, and Mrs. Howard Van Cleave, state supervisor of home economics education. The committee meets regularly to formulate the home economics program which is offered to both men and women students at Willamette.

The Alumni Citation Award was established in 1957 to give recognition, before the community and the nation, to distinguished graduates for outstanding achievements and services which reflect honor upon Willamette University.

BETTY LEWIS FREWING, A.B., '31

Three years ago, Betty Frewing was a housewife, mother, church worker and club woman in Vancouver, Washington. Her life was busy, but comfortable. Today she is busier than ever, and with few comforts. Since 1960, she has worked with her husband, Dr. H. Leslie Frewing, in Malaya and Pakistan. Mrs. Frewing is secretary and administrator of a Medico team headed by her husband.

Helping others is nothing new for Mrs. Frewing. In Vancouver, she worked diligently in her church and her community, serving as president of the woman's association of her church and on the boards of directors of the United Fund, the YWCA and the Parent-Teachers Association.

She and her husband have three sons.

H. LESLIE FREWING, M.D., A.B., '31

Dr. Frewing is a fine physician and a great humanitarian who has made tremendous personal sacrifices to relieve human suffering. In 1960, he gave up a well-established medical practice in Vancouver, Washington, told hundreds of friends goodbye and left the Pacific Northwest that he loves so well in order to accept a call to head a Medico team in Malaya. There, he carried on some of the famous work started by the late Dr. Thomas Dooley. Last May, he was transferred to Pakistan, where he is medical director for a gigantic construction project on the Indus River.

Long before accepting his overseas appointment, Dr. Frewing was noted for his unselfishness in working for others. In Vancouver, he was an elder in his church and was a leader in the Boy Scout movement, the United Fund, Kiwanis Club, Salvation Army and the Tuberculosis Association.

Up until the time he left for Malaya, he had practiced medicine in Vancouver since 1937, except during World War II, when he served in the Army. He is past president of the Clark County Medical Society.

MARION E. "GUS" MOORE, B.A., '33

Few persons anywhere have devoted as much time, talent and enthusiasm toward the cause of young people as Gus Moore. As a YMCA staff member, a Sunday school teacher, and a member of such bodies as the Salem School Board, the advisory board of MacLaren and Hillcrest schools and the Governor's committee on children and youth, Gus Moore has proved to be a conscientious, tireless, dedicated worker for youth.

While a freshman at Willamette, Gus worked evenings and Saturdays at the Salem YMCA. By the time he was a senior, he was in charge of the youth program at the Salem Y. His responsibilities within the YMCA organization have continued to grow ever since. He has been on the staff of the Salem Y for 25 years, the last 14 years as general secretary. He was a member of the YMCA International Committee serving in Jerusalem, Israel in 1959-60. He has served in many other important capacities in national and international YMCA work, and has been an able, admired director of numerous summer camps.

The national YMCA has described Gus Moore as "the best image of a YMCA secretary to be found anywhere in the country."

ROSE WEATHERELL NELSON, B.A., '27

When Mrs. Nelson was named "Mother of the Year" for the state of Washington in 1960, she might well have been named "busiest woman of the year," too. She is a dedicated church worker, has served as chairman of the Governor's committee on farm safety, holds several important offices with the Washington State and National Grange, and has held major offices in literally dozens of civic and fraternal organizations. An ex-school teacher, she has worked faithfully in several educational organizations.

In all of her varied activities, Mrs. Nelson has served willingly and unselfishly. She is truly a dedicated public servant.

She and her husband, Albert Lars Nelson, '31, live on a farm near St. John, Washington. They also maintain a residence in Seattle, because Mr. Nelson's job as master of the Washington State Grange requires him to be in Seattle most of the time. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have raised a fine son and daughter, who are also loyal alumni of Willamette.

JUDGE ARLIE G. WALKER, A.B., '18, LLB, '16

The dean of Circuit Court judges in Oregon, Arlie Walker has served on the bench in the 12th judicial district (Polk and Yamhill counties) continuously for 36 years. He has disposed of an estimated 18,000 cases.

Judge Walker has found time in his busy judicial career to serve his alma mater and his community. He was a Willamette University trustee for 15 years; has been exalted ruler of the McMinnville Elks Lodge; is a former district governor of Kiwanis; and is a past commander of the McMinnville American Legion post.

Judge Walker is held in high regard by members of the legal profession, who respect him for his thorough knowledge of law, his hard work, his attention to detail and his keen perception in the courtroom.

The qualities of conscientiousness, fairness and compassion, which Willamette strives to instill in all its students, have been exemplified 18,000 times by Judge Walker.

Truman Collins, First Citizen

At the 37th annual First Citizen Banquet of the Portland Board of Realtors, 700 friends of Truman Wesley Collins gathered at the Sheraton-Portland Hotel in January to honor him as Portland's First Citizen for 1962. An array of distinguished speakers paid tribute to a great citizen whose remarkable career has been largely unheralded.

In the fall of 1919 one of the attractions at the State Fair was a Flying Circus conducted by some ex-World War I aviators equipped with the famous flying crates of that day known as "Jennys". Airplanes were still something of a novelty, and one of the idle planes was encircled by a curious crowd where a pilot-spieler, between aerial stunts, was offering rides at five dollars each. Business was bum, but picked up somewhat when a juvenile looking freckle-faced freshman in a green beany stepped out and bought himself a few minutes of air time.

No one ever cherished anonymity more than Truman Collins, but since there were many students in the crowd this rash act got him off on the wrong foot at Willamette. He was a marked man. A couple of days later a bit of spice was added to campus gossip when one of the Jennys ended its career in the upper reaches of a tree on the edge of the fairgrounds. (No casualties). His interest in aeronautics continued through many years, during which time he acquired a private pilot's license, owned his own plane, and made many remarkable eagle's-eye photographs of the rugged Wallowa Mountains.

Those who do not know him well might find it hard to reconcile this venturesome side of Truman's character with his self-effacing, quiet-speaking, un-faillingly courteous demeanor. Nevertheless, he is an explorer at heart. His whole career in his own industry (lumbering) has been marked by pioneering work in logging methods, manufacturing techniques and enlightened forest management. His truly stupendous benefactions are characterized by a recognizable Collins touch—foresight.

He has ventured, too, beyond the limits of his own timber enterprises. One of the world's greatest dams, the Mangla Dam in West Pakistan, is now under construction by a consortium of eight American companies, in which a Collins company has a one-eighth commitment. This group is headed by the Guy F. Atkinson Company of San Francisco, another of Willamette's great benefactors. The Mangla Dam is 370 feet high and two miles long and is said to be the largest fixed price contract ever let ($354 million).

Even this strictly business endeavor has its idealistic aspects so far as Truman is concerned. This point came out in his response to the presentation of the First Citizen award. He feels that American industry can contribute a great deal to those nations that are struggling to better their lot by bringing their semi-primitive economies up to modern standards within a generation or two. It is a way to help worthy people to help themselves, "and incidentally, maybe make a little money." That this somewhat doubtful note is well taken may be judged from the fact that the enormous investment in the Mangla Dam is centered in an area only 200 miles from the recent incursions of Red China into India.

The dam is not the first Collins enterprise in India. The Collins Institute, a Methodist mission boys' school in Calcutta, was named for Truman's grandfather, who was one of its founders many years ago.

In his support of many worthy causes Truman has assiduously observed the Biblical injunction, "Let not your left hand know what your right hand doeth." In fact, some of his friends wonder if even his right hand knows all that is going on. In the words of the First Citizen Committee:

"Realizing the innate modesty of this fine Christian gentleman, and that a true philanthropist, as he most certainly is, never expects or desires public knowledge or public recognition of his personal benefactions, we shall refrain from quoting any spectacular details or sum total of dollars he has so quietly handed out to religious, educational and character building enterprises that he has decided to be meritorious. If there were any way to ascertain the full extent of his many benefactions, we are certain they would add up to a surprising total.

"We suspect that Truman Collins will be somewhat disturbed and perhaps more embarrassed than pleased when telephone calls and notes of congratulations are showered upon him."

This is a true gauge of Truman's character. No one wishes to pry into such a personal matter, but many of his good works have left an obvious trail: the Boy Scouts (Camp Collins), the YWCA, the YMCA, Willamette University, the University of Puget Sound, the Methodist Church, and most particularly the Methodist Board of Missions, of which he is a trustee.

Moreover, in his continuous labors in behalf of others he is but furthering a family tradition that extends over four generations. In the words of President Smith in his banquet tribute, "The Collins family has a remarkable record with each generation in turn building and enhancing the contributions which preceded. Great causes have challenged the devotion of this family, resulting in rich investments in human values."

The Collins timber and lumbering business started with Truman's great-grandfather over 100 years ago in Pennsylvania. The gradual shift of operations into the great forests of the Northwest began with his grandfather and were consolidated and developed in this area by his father, the late E. S. Collins. This name is perpetuated on the campus in the Everell Stanton Collins Hall of Science, one of the last of his many gifts to Willamette.

Truman entered Willamette with the class of '23, but much to the surprise of his fellow students he suddenly turned up in cap and gown to graduate with the class of '22, at the age of 20. He was one of the five charter members of Kappa Gamma Rho, now a chapter of Beta Theta Pi. His undergraduate associates remember him as a thorough, hard-working scholar, yet always ready and eager to take part in whatever extra-curricular and sometimes over-enthusiastic activity that happened to be afoot. Throughout his sophomore year he held a job at the paper mill, which was certainly no sinecure. Every night, from five o'clock to midnight, he shoveled chips in the huge chip bin. This was often mentioned in the publicity and speeches attending the First Citizen award, and various reasons assigned for it. One was that he found his far from lavish allowance a bit restrictive. This writer, however, would like to add another that he believes to be more accurate. Truman had observed the many men on campus who were earning their own way through college and he felt that they were gaining something from their college experience that he was missing. That he was able to graduate in three years while carrying a work load like this certainly supplies an insight to his character.

Truman entered college at an earlier age than most of his classmates and this disparity was heightened by his extremely boyish appearance, which soon earned him the nickname of Babe. It may be suspected that he did not particularly enjoy this handle, but he accepted it with his usual good humor. Actually, it was a sincere mark of affection and those who lived with him quickly gained a deep respect for his mature judgment.

After graduation Truman went on to earn a graduate degree from the Harvard School of Business Administration and within a few years was actively engaged in the family business. During the war he served as a Lieutenant Commander in the Navy. In 1943 he married Mari-beth Wilson, daughter of the famous clergyman Dr. Clarence True Wilson. They have twin sons, Terry and Timothy, and a daughter Cherida. Other members of this generous family now living in Portland are his mother Mary L. Collins, his brother and business associate Alton Collins, and his sister Grace Collins Goudy, a graduate of Willamette and a member of the Board of Trustees.

A catalog of Truman's business associations make an unwieldy list. In addition to the several Collins enterprises which he heads he has served as the administrative head or as director of numerous industry-wide organizations such as the Forest Industries Council, the Pacific Logging Congress, the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, and many others. He is a director of the Standard Insurance Company, the Crown-Zellerbach Corporation, and at age 38 became one of the youngest directors ever elected to the Board of the United States National Bank. He has served for many years on the Board of Trustees of Willamette University, and since 1957 as President of the Board. President Smith has often paid high tribute to this board which has been associated with him in the notable progress of the University.

The amazing thing is that Truman really works at all of these assignments. His thoroughness was mentioned by a Vice-President of Crown-Zellerbach (James P. Mitchell, Eisenhower's Secretary of Labor) who told the assembled banqueters that he knew more about the company's operations than management itself. He is too conscientious to neglect any job he undertakes.

Though it was an evening full of oratory, Truman came up with the best speech of the evening simply by being himself. In his characteristic slow drawl he admitted, "I can't conceive of myself in this spot." The 700 guests experienced no such difficulty.
