Fundraising begins for new library

Willamette University's Board of Trustees has authorized the administration to begin the necessary fundraising for a new University Library, currently estimated to cost $4.4 million, and for renovation of Collins, Eaton and Waller halls. No estimate for renovation work will be available until schematics are developed.

At a weekend meeting at Sun River, the board also approved fundraising for other special projects as defined by the Board of Trustees.

Robert P. Lisensky, Willamette president, said the estimated amounts for the new library and the renovations will be set by the board when it meets in January.

In conjunction with the fundraising, building and renovation authorization, the Willamette board also resolved that a campaign coordinating committee from appropriate constituent groups be appointed to direct fundraising for the major capital campaign. Dr. Lisensky is to appoint the campaign committee with the concurrence of the officers of the board.

Preliminary plans from the library project architects—Murphy, Downey, Wofford and Richman of St. Louis—showed a three-story, 55,000-square-foot library building that included a 150-seat auditorium, study space with carrels, listening rooms, typing rooms and group-study rooms. The lounge area overlooks the mill stream. The preliminary plans have the library straddling the stream south of Doney Hall and Lausanne Hall. The library building will house materials for the Atkinson Graduate School of Administration as well as the College of Liberal Arts. The latter will include music and chemistry volumes and the audiovisual center now in separate locations.

The Financial Affairs Committee presented the 1978-79 audit completed by Arthur Andersen and Co. The audit showed that, in the fiscal year ending May 31, 1979, the university had a $141,000 excess of revenue over expenditures and mandatory transfers. The audit also revealed a market value of all investments of $31,477,000 on May 31, 1979, highest in Willamette's history.

The board meeting included sessions on academic planning reports from the liberal arts, law and administration schools and a report on department self-studies and accreditation. The university has been engaged in a long-range planning process for about two years, an effort greatly enhanced by a planning grant of $98,353 from Northwest Area Foundation.

Approval given program in secondary education

Willamette's secondary education program recently received approval from the Teacher Standards and Practices Commission and meets the 1980 Rules for Certification.

In a letter to President Robert Lisensky, Richard Jones, executive secretary of the Commission, officially notified the University of the approval with basic endorsements in advanced math, art, basic math (combined) biology, drama, French, German, integrated science, language arts, language arts/social studies, music, physical science, Spanish, speech and social studies.

Executive Secretary Jones also praised

BUNNY DUGGAN, friend of Willamette and widow of the late William "Red" Duggan, Willamette's diplomat-on-campus, recently presented President Robert Lisensky with a copy of Duggan's last book, "Our Neighbors Upstairs: The Canadians." The book, which is available at the University Bookstore and at Salem area bookstores, attempts to sketch Canada's national profile and to distill the essence of its people's character today. The book contains a foreword by Duggan's close friend, former governor of Oregon Robert Straub, and an endorsement on the back of the book cover from history Professor Emeritus R. Ivan Lovell. Duggan died before completing the necessary work to have the book published and so his wife spent many months completing the paperwork.

Dr. Wright Cowger, chairman of Willamette's education department, for his assistance. "The Commission appreciates the assistance of Wright Cowger in preparing these materials for review. Dr. Cowger has been an outstanding member of the Teacher Standards and Practices Commission since 1976," Jones said.

Food and Hunger Conf. hosted by Willamette

Prominent speakers and a campus fast were among the highlights scheduled for the November 14 and 15 food and hunger conference at Willamette.

John Connor, Director of Campus Ministry at Oregon State University, opened the conference by addressing the infant formula issue and the arms race as it relates to the world food problem. Frances Moore Lappe' of the Institute for Food Development Policy elaborated upon afternoon workshops with a speech entitled "Myths of World Food Problems." A dinner preceding Ms. Lappe's address stressed alternative protein.

The Willamette Christian Body organized the campus fast in conjunction with OXFAM, an international development agency which funds self-help programs.

The Hunger Analysis/Action Project (HAAP) sponsored the conference with Joan Peterson, the campus contact. Registration was free, but organizers asked that a can of food be brought in lieu of a charge.

Due to an editor's mistake, the last issue of the Willamette Scene carried the wrong credit line for the photo feature of the Commencement Weekend.

Michele LaBounty, then the News Bureau Director and now a reporter for the Medford Mail Tribune, took the photos but Jamie Stillings was listed as the photographer. Both took photos for the Willamette Scene.

Will you help Willamette University?

It will be of great assistance to the University in formulating long-range financial plans if you will check the following statements which apply in your case: All answers will be held confidential.

— I have made provision for Willamette University in my will.

— I have not made such provision, but will have my will revised to include a bequest to Willamette University.

— I will seriously consider including Willamette University in my will.

— I am interested in the idea of a gift subject to a life-income trust and would like to know more about this way of giving.

"Don't neglect the art of living while you're all wrapped up in studies aimed at the business of living."

— Lestle J. Sparks

Lestle Jesse Sparks, a force at Willamette University for 55 years as student, professor and coach, died Tuesday at his residence. He was 82.

"Les" Sparks, a pioneer in Oregon athletic education, coached a variety of sports and for years headed the physical education and health departments at Willamette. A vital and life-loving man whose energy extended well into his advanced years, he continued to coach Willamette's tennis team after his retirement, quitting in 1974 after 46 years.

Sparks was honored many times. One of the biggest honors came from Willamette, which named the university's new physical education and recreation center after him. A bronze bust of Sparks is displayed in the foyer.

Friends described him as a hard-working, competitive man who was nonetheless a gentleman and a man devoted to young people. Many called him "Mr. Willamette."

"His career at Willamette extends over a longer period of time than any other person ever associated with the school," said Dr. Seward Reese, law dean emeritus and a long-time friend and tennis companion to Sparks.

To hundreds of former Willamette students, some of them now in their 50s and 60s, Sparks was a trusted friend and advisor.

"He was like a father to me and many others," said one, Milt Baum.

Among the sports Sparks coached were football, basketball, tennis and track. As coach of the freshman basketball squad, Sparks developed and published the first scorebook which charted moves of all players.

For 25 years he was manager and director of the state high school basketball tournament, which began at Willamette.

A native of Arkansas, Sparks lived in Oregon from age seven. He attended Willamette as a student from 1914 to 1919, graduating with a B.A. in chemistry. He later added a master's degree in hygiene, health and P.E. from Stanford. Sparks began teaching at Willamette in 1923 and continued full-time until 1962. From 1944 he was professor and head of the physical education department.

Since Sept. 7 he had been under intensive care at the Capitol Manor infirmary with a circulatory problem.

He is survived by his wife, Marion Linn Sparks; two daughters, Mrs. Marion DaBall, Star Lake, N.Y., and Mrs. Marilyn Severson, Seattle, Wash.; his sister, Fay Sparks, Salem, and two grandchildren.

Lestle Jesse Sparks, a man devoted to a university and to physical education, died Tuesday at the age of 82.

Sparks had been seriously ill with a circulatory disease for two months. Since Sept. 7 he had been under intensive care at the Capitol Manor infirmary.

Since his enrollment at Willamette University in 1915, Sparks had devoted nearly 55 years of his life to the school as a student-athlete, professor and coach.

At Willamette, he coached all sports and was head of the physical education and health department. He served as assistant athletic coach, 1925-26; assistant professor of physical education, 1926-35; associate professor of physical education, 1935-44; and professor and head of the physical education department, 1944-62.

At various times he was the head coach of the football, basketball, track and tennis teams. He served as tennis coach for 46 years before resigning in 1974.

He was born to Dr. and Mrs. A. H. Sparks in Seay, Ark., on May 3, 1897. His mother died last December at the age of 102.

He is survived by his wife, Marion Linn Sparks; two daughters, Mrs. Marion DaBall, Star Lake, N.Y. and Mrs. Marilyn Severson, Seattle, Wash.; his sister, Fay Sparks, Salem; and two grandchildren.

Since age seven Sparks had made Oregon his home. He graduated in 1914 from Bandon High School.

He graduated from Willamette in 1919 with a degree in chemistry. Following graduation he taught and coached at Coquille High School, near Bandon. He then attended the University of California at Berkeley and was offered a position at Berkeley High School, where he headed the physical education department and coached basketball.

In 1921 Sparks returned to Salem when his sister Fay entered Willamette. He taught one year at Washington Junior High School. The next year he taught chemistry and physical education and coached basketball and track and field at Salem High School.

While Sparks was at Salem High, Willamette University president Carl G. Doney offered Sparks the use of the school's track in exchange for coaching the Willamette track team. In 1923 he was offered a full-time position teaching at the university.

In 1932, Sparks received his master's degree at Stanford University. He also earned special degrees in hygiene and health, in physical education, and in education from Stanford.

Sparks was a prominent figure in athletic and physical education circles in Oregon, the Northwest, and the nation.

As coach of the freshman basketball squad at Willamette, Sparks developed and published the first scorebook which charted all the moves of the players.

For more than a quarter of a century, he was manager and director of the state high school basketball tournament, which began at Willamette in the school's old gymnasium.

In 1961, Sparks was inducted into the NAIA District II Hall of Fame.

He held a life membership in the American Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation (AAHPER); he was a charter member and archivist of the Oregon chapter of the AAHPER; he was a member of Phi Delta Kappa, a national honorary education fraternity; and a member of other professional organizations.

One of Sparks' highest honors came when the Willamette Board of Trustees named the school's multi-million dollar athletic facility after him. The Lestle J. Sparks Physical Education-Recreation Center opened in the fall of 1974.

Sparks received a special award at the 1975 Hayward Banquet for Oregon's top athletes.

In 1976 the University honored Sparks by commissioning Willamette art professor Robert Hess to execute a bust of Sparks. The bust is on permanent display in the foyer of Sparks Center.

Sparks served as a member of the Willamette Board of Trustees and received an alumni citation. He also served two terms on the State Parks Advisory Committee and helped negotiate the purchase of land for Bullards Beach State Park near Bandon.

Les Sparks' friends knew him as a man who lived a full and active life. To one of them, he was "Mr. Willamette."

Sparks died Tuesday at the age of 82. For 55 years of official service and several more in an unofficial capacity, he had been a helpmate for almost everybody on the Willamette University campus.

He was also involved in athletics from coaching to the training room. Several of his closest friends were his tennis partners.

One of them, Dr. George Martin, said of Sparks: "He was concerned for the students, the University and everyone."

Martin joined the university in 1947 as head of the education department and instantly became a close friend of Sparks. "He immediately adopted me as a tennis partner," Martin said, "and he took me around the state and showed me the fine schools and fine people."

Another tennis companion and long-time friend, Dr. Seward Reese, said Sparks was an ideal athlete who was competitive but a gentleman.

Reese said Sparks played tennis until three months ago. "He couldn't serve because of problems with his left arm," Reese said, "(so he) played doubles, having his partner do the serving."

Milt Baum, a student of Sparks' and another tennis companion, said of Sparks: "Because I didn't have a father, he was kind of a father figure to me and many others."

Of his final match with Sparks, Baum said, "He still had reflexes like a little cat."

For those who knew Sparks, it had always been that way. A typical day would find Sparks at the school before most professors. He wouldn't leave until dark. He would teach classes, help in other classes, play tennis or badminton at noon, coach the tennis team and wrap football players' ankles.

He just couldn't tear himself away from the university. He was ubiquitous, a little man dressed in white walking with short, quick steps who seemed to appear in almost every corner of the campus.

And that's one of the reasons Reese, Willamette's law dean emeritus, called Sparks as "Mr. Willamette."

Dr. Gale Curry, head of the women's athletic department between 1926 and 1946, remembered how Sparks helped her establish a swim program.

"He was always coming to my rescue when things got heavy," said Curry, who had been a neighbor of Sparks' at Willamette Manor. "He helped me teach classes when I was busy. He had a great deal of integrity. We didn't always agree, but we always worked it out."

Ted Ogdahl, Willamette's head football coach between 1952 and 1972, said Sparks left a tremendous impact on many people: "He was a beautiful man. He reached out and touched you. He had a warm spot; he was concerned with his students as a friend and advisor and how you came out."

WILLAMETTE ADMISSION

The oldest college in the West faces increased competition

By Peggy Sand,
special writer
for the Scene

The well of college-age students, which during the past two decades has been brimming over, will lose depth in the 1980s as a projected 10 to 15 percent drop in student applications in the western states becomes reality and admission offices are left with a shallow pool.

As universities across the nation face the prospect of fewer high school graduates, they will depend more on their admission staffs to promote programs.

Admission officials now must combine the acumen of a marketing specialist with the finesse of a public relations executive and the perception of an educator. And they must be in high gear 12 months of the year.

"It used to be nine months of pressure and three months that were more relaxed when we could at least have a coffee break. Now we don't even have time to have coffee. We are putting one class to rest and working simultaneously on another class," said Frank Meyer, Willamette Director of Admission.

In the 1980s high school graduating classes are projected to shrink, with more of these graduates headed for vocational training. According to Sam Hall, Director of Planning and newly-appointed Vice President for Academic Affairs, Willamette could be smaller by about 100 students.

Last year Willamette's total enrollment peaked at 1,830. This fall's total enrollment figures were close at 1,827. The freshman class, however, was down around 25 from 1978. The shifts in enrollments are a possible indicator of what may be ahead in the next decade.

The admission department is preparing for this change by blueprinting a more sophisticated recruitment program. At a prominent place in this is an Alumni Admission Assistance program, coordinated by Teresa Hudkins, Assistant Director of Admission.

The admission department, among other things, is also buying 15,000 names of potential applicants from the Student Search Service of the College Board, has prepared a new slide show for meetings and on an experimental basis tested spot radio ads.

The University as a whole has prepared for the 1980s by reaffirming its tradition of high admission standards. The average entering Willamette student has an academic high school grade point average of 3.3 on a 4.0 scale.

"The admission office makes a strong case that, if the quality of Willamette's incoming students is reduced, the University will suffer and enrollment will go down," Hall said.

Willamette President Robert Lisensky has maintained that the University's survival kit for the next decade is to strengthen the liberal arts curriculum which has provided "139 years of history rather than change."

"I do not believe Willamette is going to have problems getting students. I'm more worried about getting the kind of students Willamette wants to teach," Lisensky has said.

As Willamette moves into the next decade with fierce competition from other universities struggling to get their piece of the enrollment pie, it will be the job of the admissions office to effectively market the college's program.

Meyer is thoughtful about the challenge ahead. "Every college is out recruiting, with no exception," he said.

"I find it funny and sad and frightening at the same time. There is a smaller pool of people and all colleges are trying to get more students out of it. We are all going to take a shrinking market and still get more students, obviously that can't be done. The question really is how can we manage realistically?" Meyer continued.

Other independent colleges throughout the Northwest are increasing their recruitment efforts. Lewis and Clark replaced its top two admission officials this fall.

One new official is Dean of Admissions Robert H. Loeb III, formerly Associate Dean of Admissions at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn. Loeb plans an aggressive effort focusing on the Western area states while targeting visits to a number of schools on the East Coast.

Reed College's admission team is setting up national recruitment goals instead of regional strategies used by most Northwest independent colleges.

The University of Portland in recent years has expanded its use of the College Level Examination Program (CLEP) as an enrollment tool. Other schools have chosen to grant no-need scholarships.

Meyer said the Willamette admission department is equivalent in size to other Northwest small colleges and he doesn't foresee any immediate expansion.

"The dilemma colleges are faced with is inflation on the one hand paired against the need to minimize the budget and attract more students. To simply recruit harder and more extensively is in some sense counterproductive because it costs more and more per student to do so," he said.

Meyer said one thing the Willamette admission department will avoid is tactics that border on gimmickry.

"We want to think of more effective ways to communicate our image. But we don't want to entice people to enroll on the basis of gimmicks. We think that would shortchange both the student and University," he said.

IN THE 1980s

One image that Meyer wants in focus is that Willamette is not a school for just the affluent. At least 55 percent of the students are on financial aid (scholarships, grants, loans, campus work or a combination).

"We basically say that any student, traditional or nontraditional, who shows need based on the Financial Aid Form, will receive a financial aid package," Meyer said.

"If a single woman on low-income with three children applies, we should be able to help her. Many students don't think we have enough aid to help them. If they would only give us a try, they would be surprised," he said.

Possible financial aid is one of the messages that the four Willamette admission officials bring to the some 550 high schools they visit during the academic year. The team spends from 15 to 25 percent of its time traveling to most of the Rocky Mountain and far western states.

Much of the rest of the time is spent reviewing applications and communicating with applicants. About 70 percent of the high school applicants are accepted.

Potential applicants are evaluated on their academic records, the diversity they can bring to the university, standardized test scores, recommendations, extra-curricular activities and a personal interview, when possible.

Students are more discriminating now according to Mrs. Hudkins. They apply to fewer schools and generally know what type of school they want.

And applicants enroll later and are more casual about the admission process. The admission team now works well into the summer accepting new students.

"When we talk about deadlines we are in effect kidding ourselves. The students are saying, 'I know that with my good credentials I can enroll at a good college and if they don't let me in, I'll go to a state school. They are always open,'" Meyer said.

Meyer said that as more colleges scramble for students in the 1980s, it will increasingly become a student's market. But, he said he feels the strong universities with quality programs will be the survivors.

"Willamette is in an excellent position relative to most colleges. We have good financial stability and exceptional programs for students. We'll be tested by the '80s, but when all is said and done, we'll pass with flying colors," he said.

"Every 18-year-old in the west is in our territory. The only way we can hope to reach them is with help from alumni and friends of the University," said Frank Meyer, Willamette's Director of Admissions.

Meyer cited the recent connection between Percy Loy, father of former Willamette student Mike Loy, and an applicant from the People's Republic of China as an example.

Loy, through a chain of business and personal connections that extend to China, recommended Willamette University to Douglas Zhi-De Pan, 23. The Chinese man has been admitted and plans to begin studies at Willamette this spring.

If he does enroll, Meyer said, he will probably be the first undergraduate student in the United States from Mainland China since the Revolution. This is the type of recruitment contact Willamette hopes to make, perhaps on a more modest scale, through its new expanded Alumni Admission Assistance program.

Recruiters stress 'possible' financial aid for all

Teresa Hudkins, Assistant Director of Admission, organized a three-day admission workshop for 35 alumni new to the program who traveled from throughout the West to Willamette last month.

The group met Sept. 27 through 29, for an intensive training program including information on current Willamette programs, attitudes, facilities, and social and curricular changes.

Throughout the year the alumni will be enlisted to visit local high schools, telephone potential students, represent Willamette at local college fairs, and host gatherings for prospective students who have been admitted to Willamette and the parents. Business cards will be printed for the alumni to give to prospective students in their areas.

One active alumnus is Stanley Okinaka of Honolulu, Hawaii, who graduated in 1974 and is now a hospital administrator.

"I just feel Willamette did a lot for me. I made a lot of friends and contacts and it's a good way to keep in touch," he said. Okinaka has begun local recruitment efforts by contacting high school counselors in Honolulu.

Elaine DeHarpport of Portland, from the class of 1958, has a different incentive for being involved. When her oldest son, now attending Oregon State University, was interested in college, Mrs. DeHarpport found the reception at Willamette lukewarm.

"I was disappointed with the treatment he got there. So when I joined the Alumni Board, I said I would like to work with admissions," she said. As chairman of the Board's Alumni Admission Assistance Committee, she has been involved with Mrs. Hudkins in organizing the workshop.

Both Roger Bergmann, class of 1966, of Reno, Nev. and Dr. Ted Cook, class of 1960, of Spokane, Wash., cite the same reason for being involved; they are sold on the small college liberal arts education.

"I think the education I got at Willamette was excellent. The broad liberal arts education is still superb," said Cook.

Mrs. Hudkins said the alumni recruitment idea is not new and has been used effectively by a few other colleges for several years. Willamette has utilized alumni previously, but never to the extent planned this year.

"I would go to a high school and see an alumnus from another college bring in a batch of students for his or her college representative to see. I might see one student. I began to think, why aren't we doing this?" she said.

"Alumni can really help in reaching students. Recommending students to us is another way (besides money) in which alumni can contribute to Willamette."

CAMPUS IS MORE DIVERSE

By Peggy Sand,
special writer
for the Scene

Traditional and nontraditional students choose Willamette

Just how homogenized is the Willamette campus?

It would be stretching it to say the university represents a melting pot, but the campus is slowly becoming more diverse.

If there are common denominators, a typical Willamette incoming freshman would be sketched like this.

A recent high school graduate (97 percent), white (89.5 percent), unmarried (99.3 percent) with a family income above $10,000 (95.6 percent).

He or she would probably travel more than 100 miles to attend Willamette (58 percent) and come with a high school grade average of "B" or better (87 percent).

This could easily describe Student Body Treasurer Kerry Tymchuk. Tymchuk, a junior, came to Willamette from Reedsport with a 3.89 GPA.

Willamette is the only school he applied to and this he said was because of its reputation (as with 75.1 percent of the incoming freshmen). Tymchuk said when he graduates from Willamette he plans to go to law school (as do the largest share of freshmen, 27 percent).

Tymchuk may fit the mold, but there is a significant segment that doesn't—the nontraditional student.

Judy Hassoun is one student that fits this category. Mrs. Hassoun, 30, is married and has two children. She said her Willamette experience has been positive except for one drawback.

"It would be nice to have more older people like myself. If the numbers of nontraditional students increase, I would enjoy it more," Mrs. Hassoun said.

She said she selected Willamette because it has a good reputation and is close. She is receiving financial aid and feels that with the expense of commuting to an out-of-town school, plus extra baby-sitting fees, she isn't paying much more at Willamette.

Betsy Hauge, 25, is a Willamette graduate who unlike many classmates didn't enter as a freshman. And she left the prestige of a Harvard degree for Willamette.

Ms. Hauge, now a medical student at the University of Oregon Health Sciences Center, started Willamette in August of 1975. She was from the Pacific Northwest and decided to return when she became dissatisfied with Harvard.

"Harvard is very big and students are mostly taught by teaching fellows. I did not think the educational merit was all that great," she said.

So with help from the admission department she was able to rechannel her National Merit Scholarship for use at Willamette.

"I was very happy at Willamette, the curriculum was flexible and it was nice to have a place small enough to experiment," she said.

Gene Dominguez returned to Willamette this fall for the second time.

Dominguez first attended Willamette in 1973 for two years. Then he went home to Los Angeles to work as a transit consultant. While there he went to California State University part-time.

"It's a big school, 38,000 students with no personal attention. I wasn't getting the kind of aid I needed," he said.

Dominguez contacted the Office of Admission, was readmitted and received a financial aid package which he said makes it possible to finish his college career only owing a few thousand dollars.

Students like Mrs. Hassoun, Ms. Hauge and Dominguez aren't the norm at Willamette, but Jim Sumner, Associate Director of Admission, said the composition of the Willamette campus is slowly becoming more diverse.

According to figures by the American Council on Education, interpreted by Sumner, there are some subtle changes. The incoming class of 1978 was 89 percent Caucasian compared to 90.7 percent the year before.

The figure also showed a religious diversity, as 22.7 percent of the Willamette students said they were reborn Christians. At least 20 percent had no religious preference, 18 percent were Roman Catholic, .7 percent Jewish and the rest spanning a variety of religions.

"Diversity is extremely important to us. We've made good strides but have quite a way to go before we'll be satisfied," said Frank Meyer, Director of Admission.

ANNUAL REPORT

Willamette seen as solid academically, secure financially

Last summer, a group of Willamette people sat around a table in the University Center to discuss the 1979-80 catalog. Conversation led to what was exceptional about Willamette, why the school continued to be one of the best liberal arts colleges of the area, why the University was not only confident that it would survive the difficult years ahead but would survive with distinction. The group concluded that what made Willamette exceptional was that it is solid—solid academically and secure financially.

What does solidity do for the institution, for Willamette students and for those who work for the college? The group arrived at a consensus: solidity means that Willamette changes from strength, not from insecurity or panic or desperation. Our academic programs have a solid base, and the University has a solid financial base. Willamette changes when it believes it should change—and only then.

Change is in the air. Because of long-range planning—and with the help of some generous foundation grants—Willamette has made some changes and will make more. The year 1978-79 saw Willamette going about its planning—its changing—in workmanlike fashion.

In focusing on general education, the College of Liberal Arts made substantial progress toward the revision of graduation requirements and guidelines. This was complemented by self-studies of each department to strengthen the major programs of the various disciplines. Some 45 consultants from across the country visited undergraduate departments in March and April to aid in the self-studies. To keep pace with the changing curriculum, the College of Liberal Arts expanded support of faculty development which will provide professional growth and renewal for faculty members.

The College of Law substantially improved its third-year curriculum by increasing the number of offerings in estate planning, business planning and trial advocacy for the years ahead; the courses provide intensive training and individualized attention to each student. The law school also established the Willamette Legislative Review to analyze and comment upon the most significant legislation enacted by the state legislature; the Review allows more students to obtain writing experience and enhances the College of Law's relationship with the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the state government. A highlight of 1978-79 was the week-long continuing education program in trial advocacy, a program attended by lawyers from 15 states.

The Geo. H. Atkinson Graduate School of Administration activities were highlighted by progress at the Center for Business-Government Studies, which established a Roundtable of prominent business, government and labor leaders, introduced The Intersector newsletter, sponsored research studies published as Center Papers and conducted a number of continuing education programs. The Atkinson School announced that 30 of 39 1979 graduates were placed by July 1. The mean starting salary for those reporting was $17,000 per year.

Gifts enhanced long-range planning in 1978-79. The Northwest Area Foundation planning grant made possible the in-depth departmental self-studies and visiting consultants. By the conclusion of the fiscal year, every functioning unit of the University was included in a long-range plan that outlined current status, goals and implementation. Meanwhile, student development received a boost when the Rose E. Tucker Charitable Trust announced a grant which enabled student services to come under one roof and to hire additional professionals; the Bishop Health Center was to become the Bishop Student Development Center with half the building for student services and half still used as a health center. The programs funded by the Lilly Endowment were winding down after three years of bringing alive many issues and possibilities for Willamette; two identifiable results were the establishment of a Center for Public Policy and a Center for Integrative Study. The Ben B. Cheney Foundation continued its generosity to the College of Law with a gift that enabled Willamette to announce two pilot intensive trial advocacy courses for the following school year.

Willamette's endowment soared to an all-time high. The market value of investments last May 31 was $31,477,000. The strong financial year was enhanced by the highest enrollment ever; there were 1,830 students enrolled at Willamette in the fall of 1978—1,276 in liberal arts, 415 in law and 139 in administration.

However, a need for substantially more income in the years ahead was indicated in the facilities study done by a Portland architectural firm and in investigations of a library committee and consultants. A new library was considered essential and major renovation of Collins, Eaton and Waller Halls would have to be soon; reports indicated deferred renovation and repair would only increase the costs in a few years. And renovation of the current library building would be required once a new structure is built.

An already renovated building—the Willamette Playhouse—received special attention in February. Visitors at the dedication saw an old gym converted into an outstanding theatre facility and watched the dedication production of "Ah, Wilderness" in the newly-named main Kresge Theatre. The campus celebration included a visit by Clive Barnes, renowned Broadway critic.

Other new names were prominent on campus in 1978-79. The former Alpha Phi residence became Cyril Shepard House, and 15 prominent people added their names to those of Willamette supporters by becoming charter members of Willamette Associates, a group to serve as a liaison between the campus and community: Lavina Atkinson, Stewart Butler, James Fitzgerald, Heather Flynn, Dennis Frank, Stanley Hammer, N. S. Hayden, Will Henderson, Cecil Johnson, Percy Loy, Charles Mills, Charles Patterson, Oran Robertson, Barbara Schwab and Mark Teppola. Hammer moved to the Board of Trustees before the end of the year and joined Raymond Balcomb, Jeryme English, Lewis King, Peter Kremer and Beverly Smith as new trustees. Meanwhile, the Board approved the following as additions to the Associates beginning in 1979-80: George Hoyt, John McMillan, Richard Reiten, Dennis Smith and Orville Sparrow.

Whereas students and some others displayed signs as they pushed for investigation of the University's investment policy, particularly as it pertained to South Africa, signs also appeared for other occasions. One was for the symbolic, if not yet actual, removal of the Southern Pacific railroad tracks which run through campus. Southern Pacific and University dignitaries were joined by Governor Victor Atiyeh and Senator Robert Packwood as an engine charged through a gigantic sign that proclaimed "SP and WU break the iron horseshoe."

An academic celebration took place at the annual awards convocation as Pacific Northwest Bell and Bell Labs brought the three inventors of the solar cell to campus to celebrate the 25th anniversary of their invention. Two of the three inventors, Daryl Chapin and Gerald Pearson, are Willamette alumni.

Not all the academic activity was on campus, however. Off-campus studies included the Year in London, the Year in Munich and a semester in Central America. Meanwhile, the continuing education program sent alumni to Russia, the Olympic Peninsula, southern Oregon (for Shakespeare and music) and twice to Seattle for the King Tut exhibit. Another noteworthy alumni program was a successful renewal of Homecoming in the fall.

The sun greeted author and social critic Theodore Roszak in August as he spoke at the conclusion of Opening Days ceremonies, which attracted many new students and parents to campus. The sun was also present when poet William Stafford addressed graduates and visitors at commencement in May. Stafford, Justice Arno Denecke and Yasuo Kanecko, vice president of International College of Commerce and Economics, Willamette's sister college in Japan, received honorary degrees.

The commencement exercise was held at McCulloch Stadium, perhaps a reminder that, in a year of academic accomplishment, varsity athletics also had an exceptional year. The varsity men broke Pacific Lutheran's six-year hold on the Northwest Conference all-sports trophy with titles in swimming, cross country, track and baseball. The defeat of the long-reigning PLU swim team and an 11th place finish by the cross-country team in the NAIA nationals stood out among the accomplishments. Competing in eight full-season sports and in three more in tournament play, the varsity women continued their successes with a sixth consecutive field hockey championship.

POPULAR FACES on the Willamette campus in 1978-79 included, pictured from top to bottom, author and social critic Theodore Roszak; Broadway critic Clive Barnes; Oregon's poet laureate William Stafford, who was the Commencement speaker; Justice Arno Denecke, who received an honorary degree; and the popular bronze bust of the late Geo. H. Atkinson, trustee and benefactor.

Voluntary and Government Gifts for Five Years

Gift Highlights

- For the fifth consecutive year, total gifts exceeded $2.6 million, marking the first time Willamette has gone over $2 million five years in a row.
- Voluntary giving dropped close to 10 percent—from $1,637,269 to $1,479,123—but the year was still the sixth highest for Willamette.
- Gifts from individuals increased 28 percent. Alumni giving increased by $28,709, parents by $3,773 and friends by $65,469.
- Oregon Independent College Foundation remained the primary source of business and industry gifts; the decrease in business and industry giving was because pledge payments to the Atkinson School have been completed.
- Foundation giving was down but the $686,170 total kept that category far ahead of others as the primary source of voluntary gifts.
- Churches and associations were ahead of 1977-78.
- The University received $50,414 in bequests, lower than in the previous year. Deferred gifts, which are not recorded until funds are available to the University, included a charitable remainder unitrust of $23,480 and a $100,000 life insurance policy.
- Four new endowment funds added $36,340 to the University endowment while another $485,677 was added to existing endowed funds; this figure includes bequests. Total additions to endowment were $522,017.
- There was a slight decrease in government funds during the fiscal year.

The Christmas splendor of Portland's Pittock Mansion awaits the Willamette Family, Sunday, December 16, as the Portland Area Alumni Club hosts this encore of a Christmas celebration among Willamette friends at the holiday bedecked Pittock Mansion high above Portland's glittering lights.

Renew acquaintances with fellow alums and some of your favorite profs. Enjoy the old-fashioned yule decor in this stunning French Renaissance mansion. This most prized historic home of the Portland Park Bureau is scheduled for the evening of fellowship from 8 to 10:30 p.m. Cost is $4.50 per person, which includes the admission price and guided tours, music and refreshments.

Over 200 alumni braved inclement weather two years ago to enjoy a similar celebration. Thus, an encore was called by the Portland Alumni Club. Park Bureau restrictions place a 250-person limit on admission, so reservations for the evening will be handled on a first-come, first-served basis.

For reservations, send your name, class year and address and number of guests along with your check (made payable to Willamette University) to the Alumni Office, Willamette University, Salem, Oregon 97301. Reservations should be mailed by December 12 at the latest. Your ticket(s) will await you at the Mansion.

The Mansion is located at 3229 N.W. Pittock Drive. From downtown Portland, go west on W. Burnside to N.W. Barnes Road (1.1 mile from N.W. 23rd); turn right on Barnes to N.W. Irving; turn right again to the park entrance and follow signs. Because of parking, it is suggested that you share a ride with friends.

Within a year, we will be celebrating our 10-year reunion. If it has been awhile since you've let your Newscat know where you are and what you're doing, please drop me a note.

Wayne Cook has moved back to Oregon, and is now a management development engineer for Tektronics, Inc., in Beaverton. He lives in Tualatin.

Pete George is an administrative assistant for Holman Transfer Co. in Portland. He and his wife live in Lake Oswego.

Carol Taranoff Stearns passed the CPA exam in May, 1978, with the highest score in Oregon and also received an Elijah Watts Sells Award as one of the top national scorers. Last December, she and a partner opened their own practice in Beaverton, where they specialize in small business and tax work. The firm's name is Cornutt and Stearns. Carol is living in Forest Grove, where her husband has a residential construction firm.

Ann Southard Beard sent a clipping from Portland's Journal of Commerce. It seems that she and another 1970 grad, Betty Woodworth Thornton, managed to fill most of a page with their recent accomplishments. Five years ago, Ann and her husband, Terry, opened the first of Beard's Frame Shoppes. This spring, Ann was appointed marketing director for the Multnomah County Fair, a position created this year to increase community involvement in the fair.

Betty is an income property loan officer for Security Pacific Mortgage Corp. in Portland. She handles multi-million dollar investment deals, a long way from the bank teller job she began with. Of her job she noted: "One of the hurdles I have to pass is the credibility test. People take a double-take to make sure I'm not a secretary."

A. Joyce Yorozu Larson is living in Port Angeles, WA. She is an analyst in the personnel department at Weyerhaeuser Co. in Tacoma.

David Bloye is a center manager for United Parcel Service in Portland, where he and his wife live.

Frank Butto is vice principal of Willamina High School. He and his wife live in Dallas.

Terry Collins is a timber cruiser for Kane Hardwood, Kane, PA.

Craig Danielson is general manager of Danielson's Thriftway in Oregon City.

Jim and Colleen Lien Fitzpatrick live in Sherman, TX. Jim, now out of the Air Force, is a pilot for Hughes Airwest. Colleen is assistant dean of community living at Austin College.

Sue Friesen has moved back to Salem after nine years of teaching in Roseburg. She is a music specialist at Aumsville Elementary School.

Do you need warm gloves or a hat for winter? Come see Debby Speer at Washington Square in Portland. She keeps a hectic schedule as manager of accessories for Nordstrom Best but always makes time for a friendly "catch-up" chat with WU alums!

Robin Simonet Colman has moved to Fresno, CA where husband, Allan, has accepted the post of city manager. Robin certainly has had her hands full as the move and birth of daughter, Britanny, were practically concurrent! Britanny joins older sister Tyson, age three.

Lynn Callender Ackerman is enjoying living and working in Portland where she is a sales representative for Safeco Title Insurance.

Lauren Ronald will be braving the cold this winter in Minneapolis, where he is an attorney with the law firm of Kutak, Rock & Hue.

Kathleen Flannery Fifer is a busy mom in Mission Viejo, CA. Husband Lou has resigned from the Navy to command the bathtub fleet of daughters, Megan (6) and Amy (3). In his "off-duty" hours he manages a printing firm in Orange City. The Fifers were expecting a new addition to the sandbox set in late August.

Linda Patrick Wright and husband, Bruce, are really getting involved in the Tucson political scene. Bruce has been working with Mo Udall, while Linda works at a bank. Linda and Bruce are anxiously awaiting Santa Stork who promises to visit sometime around Christmas with their first child.

Sally Irwin Reagan and husband, Bill ('70), are keeping busy chasing their two-year-old son, Alex. Bill has recently become the workers' compensation specialist for his law firm in San Jose, CA.

As far as I'm concerned, I am delighted to be back in Oregon. My husband, Bill, accepted a marketing position with Intel Corp., hence the transfer up from the Bay Area. We have a 19-month-old son and look forward to seeing old WU friends again. I need to know what you are all up to in order to write this article, so please write me a note, send a smoke signal, anything to get me your news. Have a great fall!

Maui—Viewed and Experienced from Camp Pecusa

Most of us arrived on June 11 at the Maui Airport—having traveled together from Portland as strangers. Two weeks later, on June 23, we parted company as friends, rich in shared experiences, refreshed from a wonderful vacation and renewed in our appreciation of the Willamette experience.

Physical facilities at Camp P. ("affectionally" known by some of us at the C.P. Social Club) presented us with abundant opportunities to get acquainted—we shared cooking responsibilities, (showers), 7 a.m. class lectures—trips to Lahaina, bridge partners, snorkeling equipment, four vans and our fair, superb and most competent drivers.

Don Breakey and Harry Rorman gave us the benefit of their expertise in biology, botany, geology and land use planning problems of the island life. They showed us all the scenic wonders and took us to all places, which represented native life on Maui.

Don led us through explorations into the rain forest and managed to have it RAIN. He also worked miracles in buying all the food and other items requested by 32 cooks. Harry demonstrated his driving agility on the precarious roads leading to Hana and made the days surrounding Pearl Harbor come alive.

A highlight for many of us was the climb in and OUT of the Haleakala caldera. Sandwiched between all of our trips and lectures was the wonderful time to swim, sun and snorkel in the warmth of Maui sun.

We each departed from our Maui adventure with wonderful memories and new and renewed friendships. Our thanks especially to Don and Pam Breakey and Harry Rorman.

ALUMNI BYLAWS

Willamette Alumni Association proposes changes to the bylaws

In accordance with Article VI of the Bylaws of the Willamette University Alumni Association, the proposed changes to the Bylaws of the College of Liberal Arts are printed below for your review. Members of the Association having opposition to any of these changes are urged to contact, in writing, the Director of the Alumni Relations.

For your edification, the Bylaws are published below in their entirety. Portions that are subject to amendments have been screened and the proposed changes written immediately below in italics. The reasons for the proposed changes are printed in bold face type immediately following the change.

Article IV, Section 2: NOMINATIONS. Nominations shall be made by a nominating committee of five (5), no more than two of whom are on the Board of Directors, which shall be appointed by the President of the Association at least sixty (60) days prior to the mailing of the winter issue of the general alumni publication, the Nominations, Records, and Achievements Committee in the manner outlined in Article V, Section 4. This change is necessary due to the fact that we are recommending a change and reduction in permanent committees.

Article IV, Section 4: VACANCIES. Any vacancy occurring in the Board of Directors shall be filled by the affirmative vote of a quorum of the Board, provided the remaining term of the vacant position is more than one year. If it is less than one year, the position shall remain vacant until filled in the manner provided herein at the following annual election. the position may, at the discretion of the Board of Directors, remain vacant until filled in the manner provided herein at the following annual election. It is necessary to make this permissive so that we may fill certain key positions. The resignation of the President of the Alumni Association (Jim Sitzman) and the moving up of the President-elect to President (Lewis King) necessitated filling of a vacancy of President-elect so that he/she can be trained for the position.

Article V, Section 1: PERMANENT COMMITTEES. The Association has the following permanent committees, whose chairpersons must be existing members of the Board of Directors.

1. Alumni Funds Committee
 2. Special Events Committee
 3. Records and Achievement Committee
 4. Admissions Counseling Committee
 5. Alumni Clubs Committee
 6. Campus Relations Committee
 7. Continuing Education Committee
 8. Long Range Planning Committee
 9. Publications Advisory Committee
 10. Nominating Committee
3. Nominations, Records, and Achievements (combines 3 and 10 above)
5. Campus Relations and Special Events (combines 2 and 6 above)

It is the belief of the Alumni Association Board of Directors that a reduction of committees through combination and reassignment will result in a more efficient operation.

Article V, Section 2: EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE. The Executive Committee includes the President, President-Elect, Secretary, Director of Alumni Relations, immediate Past President and all standing committee chairpersons. It shall meet as needed to expedite the business of the Association and shall perform specific duties designated by the Board of Directors. A quorum shall be a majority of the members of the Executive Committee. All action of the Executive Committee shall be reported to the Board of Directors. Add to the following sentence. It shall meet as needed to coordinate long range planning and to expedite . . . etc. (This is a "housekeeping" item: The Alumni Board voted to have the Executive Committee handle long range planning after the document was written.)

Bylaws of the WILLAMETTE UNIVERSITY ALUMNI ASSOCIATION College of Liberal Arts

ARTICLE I OFFICERS

Section 1. NAMES. The officers of the Association are President, President-Elect, Secretary, Director of Alumni Relations, and Past-President.

Section 2. DUTIES OF OFFICERS. (1) The President presides at all meetings of the Association and the Board of Directors, and performs all duties ordinarily performed by the President of such an association, or those duties which may be assigned by the Association or the Board of Directors. (2) The President-Elect assumes the duties of the President in case of absence or disability, and otherwise serves as a member of the Board of Directors before assuming the office of President. (3) The Secretary keeps a record of all proceedings of the Association and Board of Directors. (4) The Past-President shall serve on the Board of Directors one year after leaving the office of President.

Section 3. DIRECTOR OF ALUMNI RELATIONS. The Director of Alumni Relations is appointed by the University in consultation with the Board of Directors of the Association. The individual is a member of the University staff as well as an ex-officio officer of the Association, and is responsible to the Administration of the University. The Director of Alumni Relations maintains the Association office at the University, keeps the membership directory and files, and with the cooperation of the Board of Directors and Administration of the University plans and implements the program of the Association. In the event of the disability of the Director of Alumni Relations or a vacancy in the office, the duties of the office are arranged for by the President of the University in consultation with the Board of Directors.

ARTICLE II BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Section 1. COMPOSITION. The management of the Association is vested in a Board of Directors comprised of the officers, twenty-one (21) directors of the Association, two members of the University faculty, and two students.

Section 2. MEETINGS. The Board of Directors shall meet at least once in the fall prior to Thanksgiving, once in the winter prior to spring vacation, at least sixty days before Commencement, and at such other times as may be called by the President of the Association or the Director of Alumni Relations. Ten members present and voting constitute a quorum.

ARTICLE III BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Section 1.

NOMINATIONS. Each year, the Board of Directors shall submit the name of one of its members, who has been selected by a majority of the Board, to the nominating committee of the University Board of Trustees as a candidate for election to the Board of Trustees for a three-year term.

Section 2. BOARD TERM. A member of the Alumni Board of Directors who is elected to the Board of Trustees shall remain a member of the Alumni Board at least until his/her term on the Board of Trustees expires.

Section 3. REMOVAL. The Board of Directors by the affirmative vote of two-thirds of its members may recommend the removal of any of its representatives from the Board of Trustees.

ARTICLE IV NOMINATIONS AND ELECTIONS

Section 1. TERMS. Each year seven members (exclusive of officers, faculty and student members) shall be elected to the Board of Directors by ballot of the membership of the Association. These members shall serve for three years. The President, President-Elect, and Secretary are elected by the same ballot procedure as the Directors. Officers hold two-year terms.

Section 2. NOMINATIONS. Nominations shall be made by a nominating committee of five (5) no more than two of whom are on the Board of Directors, which shall be appointed by the President of the Association at least sixty (60) days prior to the mailing of the winter issue of the general alumni publication.

Section 3. ELECTIONS. Ballots shall be mailed by the Director of Alumni Relations to each member of the Association at least thirty days but not more than sixty days prior to the Annual Meeting. Each ballot shall list the candidates and provide adequate space for write-in candidates. No candidate's name will be listed on the ballot without the candidate's consent. The ballot shall state that they must be returned to the Director of Alumni Relations before a date which shall be seven days prior to the Annual Meeting. A faculty member shall be selected each year in the manner designated by the Faculty Senate of the University and shall serve for not less than two years. The two student members shall be selected in the spring of each year in the manner designated by the Student Senate of the Associated Students and serve for not less than one year.

Section 4. VACANCIES. Any vacancy occurring in the Board of Directors shall be filled by the affirmative vote of a quorum of the Board, provided the remaining term of the vacant position is more than one year. If it is less than one year, the position shall remain vacant until filled in the manner provided herein at the following annual election.

Section 5. REMOVAL. Any member of the Board of Directors may be removed therefrom, for cause, by the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the members of the Board.

Section 6. TENURE. No person shall be elected to serve as a director for more than two consecutive terms. An officer may not serve two consecutive terms in the same office.

ARTICLE V COMMITTEES

Section 1. PERMANENT COMMITTEES. The Association has the following permanent committees, whose chairperson must be existing members of the Board of Directors.

1. Alumni Funds Committee
2. Special Events Committee
3. Records and Achievement Committee
4. Admissions Counseling Committee
5. Alumni Clubs Committee
6. Campus Relations Committee
7. Continuing Education Committee
8. Long Range Planning Committee
9. Publications Advisory Committee
10. Nominating Committee

Section 2. EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE. The Executive Committee includes the President, President-Elect, Secretary, Director of Alumni Relations, immediate Past President and all standing committee chairpersons. It shall meet as needed to expedite the business of the Association and shall perform specific duties designated by the Board of Directors. A quorum shall be a majority of the members of the Executive Committee. All action of the Executive Committee shall be reported to the Board of Directors.

Section 3. OTHER COMMITTEES. Temporary and special committees are appointed as the need arises.

Section 4. APPOINTMENT. Permanent, temporary, and special committees are ordinarily appointed by the President, or in the latter's absence by the President-Elect, but temporary and special committees authorized by the Board of Directors may be elected by the Board at its discretion.

ARTICLE VI AMENDMENTS

These Bylaws may be amended: 1) by a two-thirds vote of the Association at its annual meeting, provided that publication of the proposed amendment has been submitted to the membership at least 30 days in advance of the meeting; or 2) by two-thirds vote of the Board of Directors of the Association after approval by a majority of the members of the Board of Directors and then publication of the proposed amendment in the next issue of a general publication to the alumni at least 30 days in advance of the final vote by the Board of Directors.

Approved at Alumni Association Annual Meeting of May 12, 1973
Amended September, 1975 and May, 1976

Alumni Annual Funds Go To Student Scholars

Contributions to Willamette's alumni annual fund in 1979-80 will be directed toward scholarships for worthy students, unless donors make specific requests for their money to be used for another need.

The Alumni Student Scholars Program, which will receive the funds, was developed to honor Willamette alumni and, at the same time, help the University in a critical need area: financial aid. The concept was enthusiastically endorsed by the Willamette Alumni Association Board of Directors. Selection of Scholars will be from all students in need of financial help and will not be restricted to children of alumni. This school year approximately 55 percent of Willamette students receive financial aid.

THE ALUMNI DIRECTORY AND YOU

SCENE: A typical palatial home of a typical Willamette alumni couple on a typical fall Monday evening. Fred has just turned the sound off the television since it is half-time and he has no desire to hear Howard Cosell. As he is watching the replays of replays from the day before, his mind wanders back to his good old days at Willamette University. Martha, Fred's long-time spouse, is sitting in an adjacent chair tending to her knitting.

FRED: (musing out loud) "Whatever happened to Susan?"

MARTHA: "Susan who?"

FRED: (startled, not realizing he had spoken out loud) "Oh, uh, nothing—I was just reminiscing."

MARTHA: "Susan who?!"

FRED: "You remember Susan Houlton. She was the May Queen and asked me to be her escort during the coronation ceremonies. I was just wondering whatever became of her."

MARTHA: (with a somewhat icy tone) "Why do you want to know?"

FRED: "Now, Martha, it doesn't mean a thing. I was just thinking about some of the good times we had at Willamette and her name came to mind."

MARTHA: "I can't remember that we ever had a good time when Susan was around! If you are going to reminisce, it would seem that you might be more likely to reminisce about our first date!"

FRED: "Uh, yes, uh, I do that all the time."

MARTHA: "There's a certain lack of conviction in what you just said. Frankly, I don't care what happened to Susan . . . and I'm going to bed."

(Fred sighs, and—the half being over—he turns the sound up on the TV once again, but resumes his reverie.)

END OF SCENE I

What does all the above have to do with an Alumni Directory, you ask? A good question, indeed. Many times we play the old "I wonder what ever happened to . . ." game, and we have no way to get an answer to this question. In a few brief months, however, we may have the answer for you.

The College and University Press has signed an agreement with Willamette University to print an Alumni Directory for Willamette University. All this is done without cost to Willamette other than supplying the original list. This has been done and word recently came back that we are next on the list to get the Alumni Directory on their computer. This directory is being sponsored by the Willamette University Alumni Association.

In a few weeks, all Willamette alumni will receive a questionnaire form which will ask for verification of the spelling of your name, your address, and your class year. The questionnaire form will also invite you to add whatever additional information you may wish to have in the directory.

It is important for alumni to return the questionnaire form as soon as possible. This will be checked with the computer and you will once again be contacted to make certain that the entry is accurate.

During these directory procedures, interested alumni will have an opportunity to order a directory for their own personal use. Since the number of copies to be printed will be determined by the number of advance orders, it will be well to consider purchasing one of these books at the time the first information comes from the College and University Press.

The Alumni Directory will also contain updated information about Willamette, including pictures of the campus. We think you will find it a valuable addition to your library and, particularly for those of you who do some traveling, you will find it a desirable book to include in your suitcase or briefcase.
