PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGES

CRAWFORD OF THE ALUMNI--

DONEY OF THE UNIVERSITY--

At the annual Alumni banquet last spring, a friend of Willamette told a story of the early struggles of Wilbur Academy, likewise an educational pioneer of the Oregon Territory. A stranger with pack on back, passing one day, stopped to chat with Father Wilbur. This gentleman, then engaged in founding the institution, ventured the suggestion that it was fine indeed for men to give to education. "Why should I give to your school" the stranger asked. "I shall pass this way no more." "Then," said Father Wilbur, "there is good reason why you should give now, that men may know you have passed this way."

His is a difficult and unwelcome task who would separate a man from his money. Not difficult because people do not want to give, because they do, but because they fight the reason, the sentiment, the enthusiasm by refusing, right off the bat, to consider the need. We all know the tug of a really vital appeal, how it grips the heart strings, and smolders and grows and bursts into flame, if we but entertain the plea and honestly seek to alleviate the condition.

A fruitive side glance and a nonchalant ignoring of a personal obligation is no very satisfactory disposition of the same.

Consider Willamette University, its growth possible only because of the consecration of individuals who have given wholeheartedly to the institution for its maintenance and the perpetuation of its ideals; possible because their thought has been with it; its needs, requirements, considered, judged and supplied.

Addressing the general convention of the Episcopal Church in Portland, the Bishop of New York made two remarks applicable to our situation: "We have always been where we are too long," and, "religion and morality are being considered more and more necessary in our education." We have recognized this need for many years and our crisis is to now step out ahead with increased facilities for carrying on.

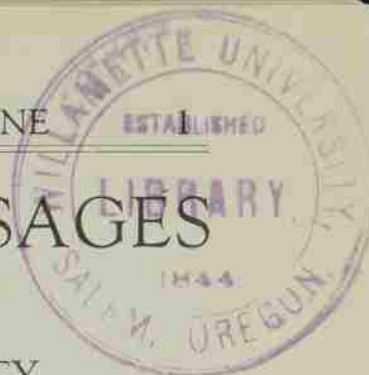

Our Alumni Association is not recorded as one of our University's great assets; as an association, the sum total of our contribution is mighty small. It may be, because no stirring need has ever arisen but the fact remains, our usefulness, our aggregate loyalty, remain to be established.

The time is here for the Alumni test and whether we make the grade is not going to depend upon business conditions, industrial relations, the plentitude or scarcity of money, but upon the reception and consideration we give the situation just before us. To advance or recede; to meet or repudiate the obligation; to increase or diminish our usefulness; there you are. It is a time to see how close together we can stand and still work, rather than how far apart we can be and yet continue in the Willamette circle.

Elsewhere the concrete facts are stated. Objections and obstructions will occur to you—but, remember, it isn't good to dwell too long on the difficulties of a problem—rather say to the doubter, "Yes, I know them well. Go thou, and hold thy peace."

Yours for Willamette,

JAMES W. CRAWFORD, '11,
President of the Willamette Alumni Association.

DR. DONEY'S MESSAGE

There is nothing on earth so securely established as a college. The devastations of war, the downfall of governments, the blight of famine and pestilence have no power to destroy a nation's colleges.

The gray walls of the Sorbonne, looking out upon Paris, have seen kings come and go, the rise of the empire, the republic and again the empire and the republic. They have heard the clash of armies, the cries of the starving, the march of mobs, the thud of the guillotine. Within, the walls have witnessed the development of science, the creation of literatures, the surer enthronement of truth. They have seen the banishment of witchcraft, the destruction of superstitions and the downfall of persecutions. A hundred ancient customs have been forgotten, banks and great businesses have fallen, the world has been torn and convulsed during the six hundred and seventy years since Robert de Sorbon gathered his faculty together; yet the college has remained a sanctuary of learning, unharmed by time or any device of man.

Oxford was founded in 1120, Bologna in 1200, Leipsic in 1409, Harvard in 1638 and they with a hundred other universities have seen the tide of years sweep past them while they grew in strength and in the dear affections of the race. A college renews itself in the youth who haunt its halls and claims an immortality in the love of those whom it has lifted into greatness.

Willamette University has already rooted itself in the conditions and principles which are as everlasting as the mountains which greet it at the dawn and sunset. A cataclysm may fall upon the nation, governments and policies may change, but so long as men retain the desire for self improvement this school will gather strength with every passing generation. Four score years have made it great; it has reserved the gifts of many and wrought as an alchemist to transmute thin gold into the more precious things of human life.

Willamette offers you the essentials of the best possible investment—permanency, large returns of the best kind and those of which the race always stands in greatest need. It has crowned its alumni with honor and power; like a true mother, it has served unselfishly and to the final limit of strength. Money could not buy what Willamette gave you. Money from you will permit the school to make many rich. Each one of us will wish a part in this exalted enterprise.

CARL G. DONEY,

President of Willamette University.

STEEVES' MESSAGE

Willamette University is entering on a Forward Movement for $1,250,000 which must be secured by midnight of next December 20th. The General Educational Board conditionally offers to give $350,000 and two laymen will each give $100,000. Of the $1,250,000 one million dollars is to be used for permanent endowment, at least $50,000 will be used for a new gymnasium to be commenced next spring and the balance for building indebtedness and maintenance pending the payment of the subscriptions.

I am proud to be an alumnus of Willamette. Its history, its present position and its assured future sustain me in this laudable pride. Deeply sensible of the honor and responsibility of being President of the Board of Trustees, I am relying upon my fellow alumni to join with me in a truly worthy response to this vast undertaking. Most of what we are and of what we have we owe to Willamette. In teaching us many things, the school taught us the fine grace of gratitude and the strong virtue of just recompense. Other alumni make sacrificial gifts to their alma maters—less beautiful, less deserving than ours—and it must not be said that our devotion is not strong and noble.

Let us lift up our eyes to the future. With an endowment of $500,000,000 and crowded buildings, Willamette has achieved nationwide distinction for high scholarship and character-building. With a trebled endowment, a modern gymnasium and other buildings (soon to come) what will not Willamette do. It has the location the ideals, the spirit, the method for making itself the marked college of this country and of yearly pouring into the disturbed life of the nation a stream of graduates who will do much to control and save society.

Despite our over-taxed facilities, more students come every year; we try to keep the numbers down to the point of efficient service, yet they want to enter because Willamette gives what they need. President Doney says we can have a thousand students in three years if we will take care of them.

I want my alma mater to have a thousand students; don't you? And a great gymnasium, and teams that win from..... and and; don't you? Other buildings, and a faculty not overlooked; don't you?

Talk it up everywhere; pray for it; give to it. There is not an alumnus or former student anywhere who does not want to shout in the victory on December 20th.

Let me paraphrase Belloc's words:

"Willamette made me, Willamette fed me,

Whatever I had she gave me again;

And the best of all Willamette loved and led me,—

God be with you, Willamette Men."

B. L. STEEVES, W. U., '91,

President of the Board of Trustees, Willamette University.

A Message from the Hon. Robert A. Booth to the Alumni

If the achievements of the students of Willamette University have proven the institution to be worth while, her Alumni has sufficient force to put over this drive. It is because of what you are that a few men who believe in you have offered over half a million dollars for endowment. This offer was made before the announcement of a campaign. The campaign is on because of the offer. It is not a mere challenge to you; it is more—it is a thought-out plan, an earnest desire to join with you in doing the biggest thing that the minds of your friends have yet conceived. Willamette has been selected as the best place in the West to concentrate gifts and efforts for the enlargement of educational opportunity that will produce the highest type of helpful manhood. Willamette is the spot chosen because the foot-prints of its worthy students are traced back to its threshold.

If the Alumni number a thousand there should be a thousand gifts now. If there is, the movement will win. If there is not, it may fail and a tragedy may cast a shadow on your life and on the world because of a duty left undone. The resultant wrong will be measured by your indifference to the opportunity now offered. No less sum than asked for will be sufficient to meet the current demands. Anything less is not a sufficient guaranty that gifts now offered will be protected and therefore is made a firm condition. Don't expect a less amount than asked for to be added to the present assets. If the total is not raised all will vanish.

Bear constantly in mind that other institutions, both state and independent, are asking similar aid at this time. If Willamette is a worthy school your first duty is to it. If you turn from it don't expect others to aid.

The Willamette Alumni justify all that has been done for the institution. There can be no regrets for the past. It is the future that confronts us with all its needs and demands.

In the name of all that a Christian civilization may become, we offer our gifts with yours to become a perpetual endowment for the enrichment of all who may enter Willamette now and as an imperishable gift to all who may come after us. Our interest is too great to be expressed in spoken words.

This is not an appeal—it is an offer in cooperation with yours. With intense anxiety we await your response. The responsibility can be neither shifted nor avoided.

R. A. BOOTH.

Where Did You Get Your A. B.?

By PROFESSOR JAMES T. MATHEWS, A. M.

Where did you get your A. B.?

You know how it is. A little company of ladies and gentlemen. Some one projects that searching question, "Where did you get your A. B.?"

You know how it is. A college graduate looking for a position, or preferment, urges as a weighty argument the possession of a college degree. Again the query, "Where did you get your A. B.?"

Yes, that is the way of it. Therefore every graduate of Willamette University who follows one of the learned professions, especially teaching is vitally concerned in the standing Willamette University maintains among the colleges of the land.

Probably our Alma Mater will never become so widely known as Harvard and Yale, and Stanford. All the more reason, then, that she measure to the full under the pitiless, exacting investigations of her resources and standards, that are sure to be made whenever a graduate from her halls claims the prestige of her name to help him up in the world.

"Where did you get your A. B.?" Cold, logical, penetrating, merciless, interrogatory.

Why do men and women toil and sacrifice to win the baccalaureate degree? Why not leave college when they have completed the studies they love under professors they admire? Why linger to pursue studies, irksome, irrelevant?

TO GET THE DEGREE.

Now, a college degree is a token, a sign, a trademark, that possesses value according to the college that grants it. And just as one star differs from another star in glory, and the effulgence of one luminary surpasses the splendor of another, so the prestige of one college is brighter than that of another.

Willamette, Willamette, dear old school, bulwark of Christian civilization on these western outposts for nearly eighty years—how now, what is to be her rank among the colleges of this country?

The present campaign for a million dollar addition to her endowment is a wise and necessary attempt to keep Willamette abreast of the times, to increase the glory of her prestige, to put weight, and value, and favorable argument into every degree she bestows, to keep her alumni and alumnae on a footing with the graduates of any college in the land.

Money, your money! Come on! Money is the material foundation. Wish the old school well, pray for her, shout for her, grand, grand. But it is money—your money—our money—that counts, that pays professors, builds halls, furnishes equipment.

Let us all, one and all, do everything in our power to keep the prestige that gleams over our degrees a mighty thing, a valuable thing, a glorious thing.

And that means we must give all we can.

JAMES T. MATHEWS, '89.

With the Editor

We introduce the WILLAMETTE ALUMNI MAGAZINE, which we trust will become the permanent messenger of our alumni association, keeping the Willamette group more closely in touch with one another and with the present day life and problems of the school. This issue cannot contain the departments we hope to establish, first things must be first, and so all this issue is devoted to the campaign.

The Alumni face but a single issue: Willamette's campaign for a million and a quarter dollars. It is not for a program the wisdom of which some might challenge, but to maintain the very existence of the present accomplishments, and to prevent a radical retrenchment in the face of opportunities and demands which would make it institutional suicide.

Willamette must and will be maintained adequately, and her graduates who know and love the school as no one else can, will now make the needful sacrifice to adequately safeguard the school which has given us so much.

Ponce De Leon sought the Fountain of Youth and other youth seekers of today try goat-glands or diets or vitamins, and why not? Is there anything more delightful to keep than youth? The best way for the Willamette Alumni to keep young is to read the Collegian. Of course the names will not mean anything, but if you read it week by week it must bring a touch of the vital optimism and enthusiasm which is the spirit and glory of Willamette and youth.

Shall the sign painter be busy making neat little boards to be placed on the Willamette campus bearing the inscription: "NO ADMITTANCE?" Shall that sign meet clean-cut, wide awake, well prepared young folks from our homes and churches? No, for every graduate is going to make it unnecessary by doing more than his share for the campaign, and he is going to do it now. Keep down those "NO ADMITTANCE" signs from the school we love.

How many books have you on your shelves which you are not using? Our Willamette Library needs every worth while book you can spare, for our library is pitifully inadequate to the growing needs of the school.

This first number of your magazine has been made possible through the gifts of a few friends. We need it—why not make other issues possible by sending a check for that purpose? Send it to James W. Crawford, Yeon Building, Portland, Oregon.

What Are the Alumni Saying About the Campaign?

LETTERS FROM GRADUATES

EDITORIAL NOTE—Limited space makes it impossible to use in this issue all of the material received, but we hope to use more of it in future issues.

The closing line of a letter from Attorney General I. H. Van Winkle (W. U. '98) says in regard to the campaign:

"May I speak for you who 'go forward' the best of success." Sincerely yours,

I. H. VAN WINKLE.

The closing line of a recent letter from Dr. Grover C. Bellinger, M. D. (W. U. Medical '09), Superintendent of the Oregon State Tuberculosis Hospital is of general interest. He says:

"I have been very anxious to see the development of Willamette's larger ideals. To me they are strong and inspiring. She must have her new endowment and the sacrifices we may make in her behalf will surely comfort us as deeds of human service."

Yours sincerely,

G. C. BELLINGER.

In a recent letter Associate Justice John McCourt (W. U. Law '96), of the Oregon Supreme Court, says:

"In common with most, if not all, of those who had the opportunity of receiving instruction and training at Willamette University, I am deeply interested in any movement that promises to strengthen and improve the college and its facilities.

"The Northwest is heavily indebted to Willamette. Much of what is best in its social, industrial and political development may be traced directly to the learning, efficiency, habits of industry and high ideals gained by students at Willamette, for they in a strikingly large number, have occupied places of usefulness and leadership in that development.

"Hoping for the success of the effort about to be exerted to secure an adequate endowment fund for the University, I am, Yours sincerely

JOHN M' COURT.

The Rev. Milton A. Marcy, A. B., B. D. (W. U. '15), a member of the Oregon Conference writes as follows:

"When we were students in dear old W. U., the Willamette spirit so filled us and thrilled us that liberal gifts for buildings or endowment were an easy matter but for limited means. Now that income exceeds outgo we can respond to the call of Willamette's need in a way which will be of large service in carrying on toward the goal. The great age of Willamette has not silvered Her hair or enfeebled Her step and we Alumni are glad. We are going to lift as we are able. We want the progressive Willamette Spirit to be the inheritance of thousands more who shall pass through Her historic halls.

"With best wishes for a pronounced success in the great objective."

M. A. MARCY, '15.

Miss Mary Reynolds, A. M. (W. U. '80) speaks with authority not only within the group of her former classmates, but also to the large group who knew, loved, and felt her influence during the twenty-three years she taught at Willamette.

"What do I think of the Million Dollar Campaign for Willamette? To one who in the earlier days felt the influence of such characters as those of President Thomas M. Gatch and Miss Ellen J. Chamberlin; to one who has seen the transforming power of that influence upon the body, mind, and soul of the student; to one who knows that, even when in a crippled financial condition, Willamette sent forth men whose power has been felt in both State and Nation; to one cognizant of the fact that from the class of 1922 twenty-five per cent will go forth to special Christian work; to such a one there is but one answer to your question—May God bless the campaign for a still greater Willamette."

MARY E. REYNOLDS.

The Rev. D. Lester Fields, A. M., B. D. (W. U. '09), pastor of the Mt. Tabor Methodist church in Portland, Oregon, writes:

"Our faculty is now the best obtainable, but altogether too few in number; our buildings are splendid as far as they go, but are inadequate to meet the growing needs; our class rooms are full to overflowing with the finest young life of the state. President Doney has been compelled to broadcast the word that the student body will be limited in number this year. When did ever such an opportunity as this stand knocking at our door, and literally challenge us to undertake big things for the Kingdom?"

"Now comes a clarion call from the president's office and from the Board of Trustees for every minister to take up the mantle of those who have toiled and sacrificed in its behalf. The University is in the throes of a new birth, and therefore brighter days are just ahead.

"As an alumnus of Willamette University, speaking to the Alumni, I have the feeling that to fail to support the University, in this her day of unprecedented need, and the greatest opportunity in her history, with our finances would be just like an ungrateful child failing to contribute to the support of his mother in the day of her destitution.

"Now to the Herculean task of raising a million and a quarter for endowment to meet the present needs of the University. If we shall pray, and work, and give, we shall win."

D. LESTER FIELDS, '09.

The most telling words received from any of the graduates comes from a recent Student Body president and were not meant for publication. He says: "Here is the letter. Don't know just what you wanted, but anyway it makes me three-quarters of an hour late for supper—that's the beginning of real sacrifice for me." Then Paul Flegel (W. U. '21), proceeds to tell us that:

"We who are recent grads realize fully the absolute and immediate need of a new gymnasium at Willamette. We feel also, though perhaps not so personally, the need of a greater endowment to meet the increased maintenance cost, increased because Willamette's work is greater than ever before and she must not be longer crippled in her great mission.

"The campaign's realization will undoubtedly be one of the hardest jobs that friends of Willamette have ever tackled in her behalf, but we who are new additions to the great family of Willamette Alumni stand ready to do our part."

Sincerely,

PAUL S. FLEGEL, '21.

Prof. John B. Horner, A. M., Litt. D. (W. U. '85), professor of history at the Oregon Agricultural College, writes:

"An additional million dollars would mean much to Willamette University, and I suppose you know where that amount can be secured. The University has a wonderful record and the nation needs church schools.

"Be sure to place my name on your list of subscribers to the alumni magazine."

Very truly,

JOHN B. HORNER.

Last year's editor of the Collegian, who is now a busy insurance man, expresses himself "editorially" by mere force of habit as follows:

"This fall, as never before and perhaps never again, real opportunity is presented for repaying in part, what Willamette has meant to the lives of its students. To suggest that failure will end the drive is to make friends with disaster, yet on the shoulders of the alumni rests a large amount of the responsibility for the success of the campaign. By every conceivable effort to secure the gifts of others and by personal gifts, the alumni can and surely will, render an adequate service.

"Surely in this time of great need, Willamette's drive will be uppermost in the minds of all alumni and they will make good their debt to the greatest of all schools."

SHELDON F. SACKETT, '22.

Another man who recently led Willamette Student Body Activities from the honored post of president, writes:

"The Willamette Campaign is on! To a recent graduate this means much. In our various ways we can outline many of the advantages—all meaning advance and progress for true Christian education.

"Officials, alumni, students and friends have and will support this forward movement so that it shall be a veritable Willamette victory! On with the Campaign!

"With best wishes for all efforts in this great endeavor, I am, Very truly yours,

ROBERT C. STORY, '20.

The New Gymnasium

Tentative plans are being drawn for the big gymnasium of Willamette that is to be one of the items in the budget for the endowment and building fund campaign for one and a quarter million dollars.

As President Doney has the university needs figured out, a T-shaped building will be asked for with a front of 140 feet and a total depth of 150 feet. The gymnasium hall proper will be 80 by 120 feet, and will be the rear or stem end of the T. It will be large enough to carry on a fine variety of athletics at one and the same time, two full sized basketball games if the seats are removed, and still room to spare.

Ample Quarters Planned

Quarters will be provided for two sets of athletic teams—the home team and the visitors. Fine dressing and bath quarters will be provided for both men and women. There will be no pool, but adequate showers. There will be a separate game room for handball or other light athletics for the women, though they have equal entrance into the big gym as the schedules may be arranged.

Offices are to be provided for both the men's and women's athletic directors, with measurement rooms and ample facilities for carrying on systematic development work with records of progress. Special rooms are to be devoted to corrective physical training, with the necessary apparatus to remedy almost any physical ill.

Seats to be Movable

Some form of movable seats for the main gym floor will be adopted without doubt, something that will make it possible to utilize the whole floor space for social or game-practice purposes when there is no audience to consider. The width of 80 feet gives a space of 15 feet on either side for spectators, after providing for a full basketball court. This would give a seating capacity of close to 1900, besides the gallery which would hold several hundred more.—(From The Oregon Statesman, Sept. 1, 1922.)

Willamette's Present Gymnasium Needs

By BURGESS F. FORD '05.

If there was ever a time when Old Willamette needed the support of all old Willamette students and graduates of the old school, it is now, during the campaign for the additional $1,000,000 endowment, and the $250,000 for the building of a central heating plant, a new gymnasium, and for other improvements that are imperative at this time, in order that the institution may take proper care of her students.

We are certainly appreciative of the fact that we have been fortunate enough to have had the privilege of using the Salem armory, but this does not, and cannot meet the needs of our students now, let alone the care of the increased number that will come in the future years.

When such noble men as R. A. Booth and E. S. Collins are willing to invest $100,000 each in this present campaign, surely we should find enough enthusiasm, pep and loyalty, to invest some of our savings in this thing. We must do it. We cannot afford to go back on the school that has done so much for us.

Every letter man who has ever played on any of the athletic teams of the University, from the very inception of such teams up to the present time, has a direct interest in the future of athletics at W. U.

We all know that with a good gymnasium on the campus we will be able to reach a larger number of good athletes than we do at the present time. And surely no one will object to getting more good athletes in Willamette University.

We grads certainly appreciate the yeoman service that our present men are doing to keep Willamette on the athletic map. But they, as well as we, would welcome additional material on our teams.

Let us pull together as a student body, as a faculty, as old students, and as members of the Alumni, to make a fine new gymnasium a reality on our campus. It can be done. And we are the ones to do it. Everybody pull together and we are bound to succeed. Attorney George Neuner, Jr., of Roseburg, Oregon, writes:

It gives me great pleasure to indorse The Willamette University Forward Movement, and I heartily commend it to the alumni of old Willamette for their most favorable and sincere consideration.

The noble men and women who have graduated and gone forth from the walls of learning of our "alma mater" have figured conspicuously in the social, commercial and religious upbuilding of the entire Northwest and many in the important affairs of state, and all can testify that the foundation of their successful careers was laid at this historic pioneer institution.

The history of "Old Willamette" is worthy of perpetuation. We are all proud of her past and we should deem it a great privilege to be permitted to enlist in the aid of the forward movement which will assure her future. I therefore urge upon each and every alumnus to play his or her part in the great forward movement that will place our alma mater on a solid financial basis so that the great work that she has to do may go on and on unimpaired and that her influence may be felt throughout the nation.

Yours for success,

GEORGE NEUNER, JR.

The Portland Willamette Club

A number of interesting social events sponsored during the summer by the Portland Willamette club have drawn together from seventy-five to one hundred alumni and present day students. Numbered among the recent activities are the annual banquet of May 19; the chicken dinner and garden party enjoyed June 28 at the homes of Mr. and Mrs. Merton DeLong and Dr. and Mrs. G. G. Forbes; the annual launch party of August 22; the three day camping trip over Labor day, and a get acquainted party at which prospective Willamette students were entertained.

Although the activities of the club are mainly social, the grads are enabled to keep in close touch with the campus situation. Owing, perhaps to the looseness of the club organization, no definite plans have been evolved for united participation in the forthcoming financial campaign, but wholehearted individual support is anticipated.

The Portland Willamette club has enrolled approximately 200 graduates and ex-students. Its annual organization meeting will take place during October. The officers are: Paul Flegel, president; Mrs. Ray Albee, secretary, and Miss Charlotte Tebben, chairman of the social committee.

L. D. '21.

A Brief Summary of the Business of the Annual Meeting of the Alumni Association

The office of Secretary and Treasurer were combined. The consolidated officer to draw an annual salary of $50.00.

Annual dues were fixed at $2.50 per year.

The Executive Committee was empowered to take any action on behalf of the association which might be necessary.

The annual meeting day for the alumni was changed from the Wednesday of Commencement week to the Monday preceding graduation. This with the idea that more would come than if held in the middle of the week.

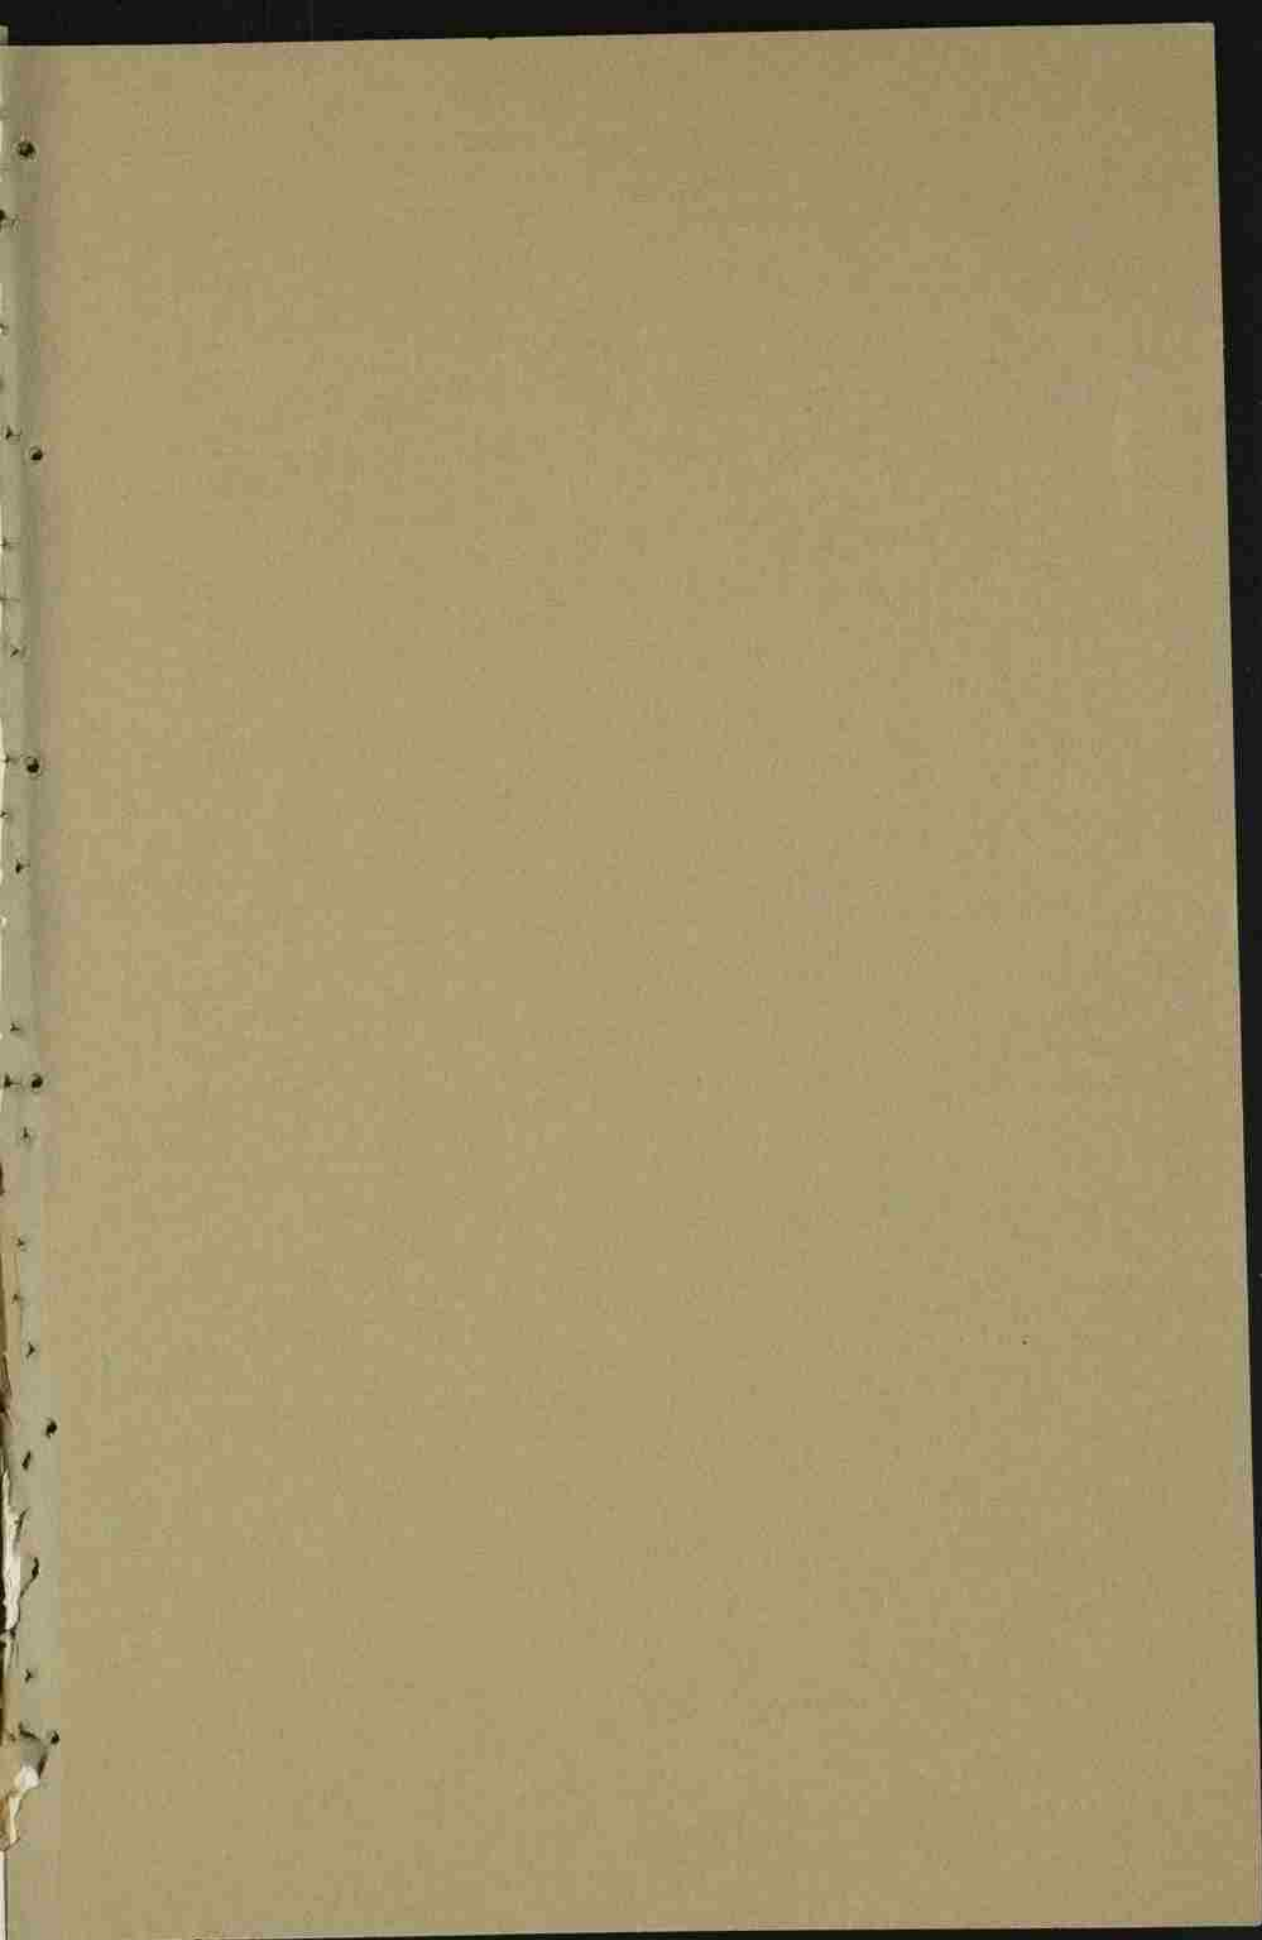

The Executive Committee was authorized to appoint a Class Agent who will be responsible for the carrying out of the Willamette program in his or her particular class.

The President of the Association was empowered and directed to appoint a committee of five to be known as a nominating committee which committee shall nominate candidates for the various offices to be filled at the annual meeting. This will not prevent nominations being made from the floor.

It was decided to authorize the Executive Committee to proceed with the publication of an Alumni Bulletin, to be issued quarterly, if possible; this to keep our membership informed as to conditions and needs.

The Executive Committee was directed to cooperate in every manner with the campaign committee having in charge the raising of funds for the University.
